Face it. In 1987 and 1988, nothing came easy. Nothing ever does: rebuilding a carburetor, rewriting a term paper, or rescheduling a date supposed to have happened last Friday. With hard work and pride, plus a little luck and a whole lot more fun, however, we rushed toward our own individual successes - Staying on Top.

Although last year's Silver Anniversary took an important place in school history, the twenty-sixth year ranked just as importantly as a new beginning. Our school possessed a winning, successful tradition in almost everything we did, from football to forensics, art to academics.

However, tradition only goes so far. To keep ahead of the pack - to Stay on Top - it's necessary to constantly change - go with the flow. We did. A new library took form this year, plus long-awaited parking. We imported a French teacher from Switzerland and a wrestling coach from across the city. The changes weren't only in faculty and the building itself, however.

Fighting the never-ending battle for accreditation, West upgraded its academic standing by building a monstrous new library.

The most important changes came from us, for whom this school existed. We decided to keep a job and let an extra activity slide, or to sacrifice money for the sake of school, or to make new friends or keep the old ones. No matter what we did, it modified us and prepared us for what we wanted - a chance at the Top.

Fond Memories

She smoothed the deep teal creases of her formal, glancing one last time at her reflection in the mirror, took a deep breath and finally departed for Shawnee Mission South Stadium. Just one month before she had been nominated by an organization and later chosen as one of the twelve semifinalists in the October 2nd pep assembly by the student body.

October 16, the day of Homecoming, KY102 broadcast from 6-9 a.m. on the West bridge to students to raise spirit for the pep assembly. Drill/Flag alumnae combined with the present team to perform "Egypt", while '86-'87 Varsity cheerleaders gave present cheerleaders a day off from wearing uniforms. The highlight of the assembly was the return of Vikestuds performing to "YMCA". Every student jumped on the floor at the end to dance with Vikestuds to "Let's Dance".

An all-day rain did not dampen the expectations of the evening, however as alumni came to the Lawrence game in hopes of seeing old friends. By game time, the rain had ceased, and the twelve finalists paraded onto the field. Throughout the stands one could hear the questions "Who do you think is going to win?" and "I hope she wins." As each candidate was named, each individual in the crowd chose their queen. Silence fell over the stands as the time approached to crown the Court. Staci Neely received the honor of second attendant and Kim Wollnik became first attendant. "And the 1987 Homecoming Queen is Georgyan Anderson." As the Court left the field beaming with enthusiasm, friends and relatives ran down to congratulate them.

The evening ended with an after party on the bridge for all students and alumni. They danced to the music of the KY102 D.J. and remembered old times.

Different Strokes . . .

Typical West student Thatcher Jeffries is a blithering mess. Why? Friday's here and he's just been through a week of pure, living hell. Students in Miss Gradewhacker's seventh hour class make bets to see when he's going to explode. As the final bell of school rings, however, a metamorphosis begins to overcome young Thatcher. The tight lines constricting his face relax into cool, straight lines. He removes a pair of Vuarnet shades and slips them with a practiced flourish over his eyes. The weekend's here, and not a moment too soon.

For 2400 students just like Thatcher, weekends acted as a pressure valve, a safety release for emotions that would surely send everyone off to the sanitarium of his choice if kept pent up inside.

Needless to say, West weekends packed themselves with activity as well as rest.

At the top of the activity list sat the ultimate emotion release, the "West Party," anywhere private to be with friends and let it all hang out. Other usual weekend outlets included movies and sporting events, which sometimes became more social than spectator. Bowling also made a surprising comeback on the weekend, dredging itself out of obsolescence to entertain hundreds of new converts at King Louie West Lanes.

However, many alternative forms of entertainment existed for the student gutsy enough to leave our little corner of suburbia.

In the heart of Kansas City sat The Big Three: Crown Center, The Plaza, and Westport, bustling centers of shopping and entertainment. Westport especially offered many alternative forms of fun, including the Tivoli theatre and a new attraction at Torre's Pizzeria, Comedysportz, competitive improvisational comedy. No matter what you wanted on the weekend, K.C. had it. Isn't that great, Thatcher? - Kent Davis

Late Night Release

Smiling, dancing, eating and laughing, the students of Shawnee Mission West were thoroughly enjoying themselves. Looking at them, no one would guess that West had just lost the season-opening football game to South. That fact had left their minds, because these students wanted to have a good time, anyway. And they weren't disappointed.

West held six after-parties during the year. They served as an activity for students after football and basketball games, hence the name: "After-parties". These parties took place at West on the bridge and in the cafeteria (where particularly yummy munchies could be found). Parents and teachers from the PTA chaperoned.

Planning of the after-parties was the responsibility of both the PTA and sub-committee of STUCO, headed by Krissie Stevenson and Kerry Farrell. The PTA provided the refreshments for most of the parties, some of which were donated, while others were paid for by the one dollar admission fee paid by each student. "A lot of the students stopped to say, 'Thanks for the refreshments,' as they were leaving," commented PTA president Judy Harl.

What would a party be without music? The task of hiring DJ's was left to the STUCO committee. They were alotted a budget for each party, and the best DJ's that could be afforded were selected from an extensive array of entertainers on file. "The DJ's played a good variety of music. It was a lot of fun," commented senior Jason Cole, who was one of the 675 students who attended the first after-party. Because students have enjoyed the after-parties so much, the PTA added two more parties this year, one more during football season and another one during basketball season. The after-parties served as an excellent method for the PTA to tell students, "We care." - Steve Young

A Day in Pep's Life

Enter the gymnasium at 7:30 a.m., slide through the joking, unmoving mass of people at the front door like a snake through grass. Find a seat in the packed bleachers somehow. Sit down and wait.

Seven thirty-five. A thundering cadence shakes the stands as the marching band pushes its way in orderly disorder up to its customary position in the northeast stands of the gym. Those were the only seats left. The traffic jam near the front now jockeys for position as it realizes it's going no further into the gym.

Seven forty. Stand as the cheerleaders rush into the middle of the floor, and the band begins to play. Sing the Alma Mater with the rest of the crowd and scream the fight song with the rest of the crowd. As you sit, remember that the Viking horn blown to begin the activities in past years has not been winded today. Coach Jerry Skakal, the traditional horn blower, now coaches at Topeka West.

Listen to the Pep Club Council rattle off the successes of all our sporting teams with a rush of school spirit, described by council member Laura Murphy as "on the upswing. You can see it in these things. More and more people come, and the crowd participates more than last year."

Next, take your choice. Last year you might have been treated to a cheer from the Varsity Rahs and yell-leaders or have seen a totally unathletic competition performed like a race to exchange clothing by school athletes. Maybe you'd be amazed or perhaps offended by "The Vikestuds," West's controversial male dance troupe. If you were really lucky, you even might get a glimpse at the Homecoming, Sweetheart, WPA, or Saga Royalty candidates.

Breaking Tradition

Around the beginning of November, quiet whispers began circulating around West: "Who are you asking to WPA?" and, "But I think he's already going with . . . " Amidst this growing flurry of activity, many young ladies began to feel the unique pressure of asking out a date for the evening.

All arrangements for the night of December 5 remained in the hands of the women. After placing reservations for dinner, attention turned to acquiring proper attire. A semi-formal dance, WPA gave everyone an excuse to dress up and look their best for one big evening.

Next step: figure out the ride situation. Some couples went in groups, while the more romantic individuals opted for a secluded, quiet evening for two.

Most people went out to dinner and then to the dance. Post-dance activities varied according to personal taste: everything from renting a party room to taking a carriage ride.

Sponsored by STUCO, the dance marked the crowning of the WPA king. It also marked the beginning of a new WPA tradition. To provide a more memorable evening for the WPA finalists, art teacher Jim Wheat rendered caricatures of the twelve candidates, which they kept after the festivities. Geir Anthonisen, King, Sal Intagliata, First Attendant, and Jonas Lee, Second Attendant, comprised the court for the 1987 crowning.

WPA allowed women to have the chance to plan an evening - not to mention footing the bill. Providing you were lucky, and you found a date, WPA provided an evening of enchantment and enjoyment, with a twist. - Kent Davis

One More Title

In a year of many elections, most Shawnee Mission West students didn't get to participate in the nationwide democratic process. However, the school held an election of its own on Friday, February 19, resulting in the coronation of the 1988 Sweetheart Queen.

Forty different organizations nominated candidates to the student body on Friday, the twelfth, at an assembly. The masses chose twelve finalists, whom they voted on at another assembly on the ninteenth. The list included: Allison Blair, Michelle Bloecker, Kelly Bucheit, Amy Dlugas, Debye Freeland, Kelli Johnson, Kristen Kinner, Tiffany Morely, Laura Murphy, Liz Rossner, Danielle Smith, and Kendra Wright.

Often, the only way to understand someone is to be in the same situation as they. This seemed to be the case as the nervous candidates retreated to Tiffany Morley's house for a quiet dinner before the ruckus of the Sweetheart announcement at the Rockurst basketball game. Many came with their hair wet and relaxed while they made themselves up for the evening.

Speaking of the evening, West beat fifth-ranked Rockhurst by one point in the last seconds, but that took a back seat to the real action.

At halftime laborers dragged a trellis backdrop onto the floor, and the twelve nominees marched into the gym, escorted by their fathers.

After the smoke cleared, the winners were announced: Kendra Wright - 2nd Attendant. Kelli Johnson - 1st Attendant. Kristen Kinner (the SAGA nominee) - Queen. - Frances Ting

Tradition Continues

Throughout the year, there were many occasions to vote on a King and Queen and Court of some particular activity; Homecoming, Sweetheart and WPA. For these Kings and Queens, candidates were voted on by the student body, after being nominated by activities.

So, in February, the Saga Royalty King, Queen and Court were selected in the same manner, right? Wrong. Saga Royalty candidates were selected through their work in activities. "It really is a lot of work organizing this, but it's worth it. These people deserve to be honored," commented junior Sagan Greta Weichman. And it was a lot of work. The juniors on the Saga staff organized everything, starting with letters to sponsors of all activities, requesting a list of all seniors who participated in their activity. The names were tabulated, coming up with a number of activities for each senior. They then made a list of the top eight guys and eight girls. In order to break ties, sponsors were consulted as to which students were more active in the activities. They then made and distributed ballots to all third hour classes, for the students to vote.

The culmination of this process came on Friday, Feb. 26, at the Saga Royalty assembly. Following the footsteps of tradition, the Vike-Studs initiated the assembly with an exotic Drill Team parody. Then the cast of the musical entertained the audience with a number from the show, Wizard of Oz. Then, last, but by all means not least, the King, Queen and Court were crowned: Misti Woodruff, Chad Hartman 2nd Attendants; Kim Taylor, Jason Paepke 1st Attendants; and Tracy Schmidt, Doug Schwabauer King and Queen. - Steve Young

Music Entertain

When someone hears the words "camping-out", the images come to mind of people sleeping in tents nestled around a campfire deep in the woods somewhere. But in teenage lingo, this term has a different meaning altogether. Some conflicts arose when parents learned that their kids who were "camping-out" were planning on sleeping on a sidewalk downtown with a throng of strangers. In response the student would reply, "Of course, Mom. I meant we were camping-out for U2 tickets!"

Some major rock concerts included U2, Boston, and Fleetwood Mac, without Lindsey Buckingham, who dropped out at the beginning of Fleetwood Mac's tour.

Some students prefered the country sound of Alabama, who played through their progressive sounds of R.E.M., X, and the Cure. Stepping up from the past were such legends as Ray Charles and Chuck Berry, who, at the age of sixty, is still touring. Classic rock performers from the not-too-distant past included Warren Zevon and David Bowie, who appeared on stage through a huge glass spider. Also, the relatively new area of Christian rock was represented by Petra and Tammy Faye Bakker.

Of course the world of pop-music was well represented by the Outfield, John Cougar Mellancamp, Tina Turner, Whitney Houston, and many more.

Around Kansas City, two of the main places to attend concerts were Sandstone, an open-air amphitheater, and Kemper Arena, a much larger concert hall that also serves as a sporting events arena. Sometime or another, most West students attended at least one ear-splitting, ground-shaking concert. - Steve Young

Japanese Mystery

Clank! Swoosh! Clank! Clank! The swords flew as the bandit and the Samurai warrior did battle. Who won? Well, the Samurai Takihiko lost, but until the end of the Fall play "Rashomon", no one knows who killed him.

The play begins in Japan, outside Kyoto. A priest, played by Brian Kelley, is fleeing the city. He flees to the Rashomon Gate to take refuge from an oncoming storm. Soon after, a woodsman, played by Derek Donovan, and an old man who lives in the temple, played by Mike Hannen,join him.

As the three men talk about the trial they have just witnessed, the trial starts to take place at the police court on the other side of the stage. The first witness is Tajomaru, played by Aaron Ball, who is escorted onstage by a policeman, played by Chris Martin. Tajomaru is a bandit and claims to have killed Takihiko. Later, Kimune, Takihiko's wife, played by Nanine Castleberry, also claims to have killed him. She is escorted onstage by her mother, played by Mardi Perlman. The final witness is the dead man himself, played by Dan Crowley, who speaks through a medium, played by Margaret Gray. He claims to have committed suicide.

As the stories are told, Tajomaru, Takihiko, and his wife appear in the grove at center stage to act out the testimony being given. The frequent sword fights required an outside chorographer, Martin English, to be hired.

Because the play faded from one scene to another while a story was being told, the lighting of the play was intricate. However, the lighting crew was lucky in that they were the first to use the new, computerized lighting board, which made a difficult task a little easier. - Steve Young

No Place Like Home

As the lights in West's auditorium slowly dimmed, the members of the audience focused their eyes and ears toward the stage. Suddenly, a familiar overture began to emanate from the pit orchestra. In a matter of moments, the curtain rose and a small, Kansas farm could be seen occupying the stage. Such was the setting for the beginning of the popular musical, "The Wizard of Oz", presented by the West Theater Department on the nights of March 10, 11, and 12.

Co-directed by Seth McClintock and William Oldham, the show was chosen for West's twenty-sixth musical because of its appeal and popularity for all age generations. "How can you not help but to be attracted to the show?" questioned sophomore Jennifer Donovan. "It's usually on television once or twice a year, so a majority of people are already familiar with the story and songs."

Though "The Wizard of Oz" didn't fit the typical Broadway musical mold of having elaborate sets, fancy choreography, and a cast of hundreds, West's production had its own unique characteristics. Special effects played a vital role in the show. Fake smoke, along with the use of the newly-computerized lightboard, made the scenes with the Wicked Witch seem more ominous and evil. To accomodate chorus members that played the "tiny" Munchkins, wooden scooters were sat upon. "The scooters were hard to use and sit on at first, but I got used to it really quick," commented senior Sara Conner.

As Stephanie Newman, stage manager, stated, "Even though most of the cast and crew knew the show before we started, doing our version of it will be more memorable." - Taylor McCammon

A Wizo Play

"The Wizard of Oz". The name brings to mind a wonderful children's story. However, this story, like "Alice in Wonderland" and "Gulliver's Travels", was written for adults as a political allegory, under the guise of being for kids.

The book was written in 1900 by L. Frank Baum. When asked about the book, he said he had written it for children, a fairy tale. This was in keeping with its pretense. However, the political messages were so apparent that the book became known as a great satire. Children's librarians despised the book.

The main issue the book addresses is the turn of the century fight over the gold standard and the silver standard. In the book, Dorothy's slippers are silver, and the yellow brick road is obviously gold. The title itself suggests this, as "Oz", being the symbol for ounces is stamped into every bar of gold. Because this struggle ended so long ago, this part of the message is meaningless today. However, the representation of the voters is still apparent in the Scarecrow, the Tin Woodsman, and the Cowardly Lion: those that don't think, those that don't feel for others, and those constantly afraid.

In 1903, it was made into a musical, for which L. Frank Baum wrote both the script and the lyrics. It became 1903's biggest hit. In 1937, it was made into a movie, starring Judy Garland. The film is estimated to have been viewed a billion times, making it the most popular movie musical ever.

It isn't often a piece of literature can become famed as both a political allegory and a children's book, but "The Wizard of Oz" managed just that. - Steve Young

Senior Aaron Ball uses the warmth of the sun and the heat of his car hood to stay comfortable as he reads the spring play script.

The in-the-round stage traditionally used in the spring show creates challenging set problems that director Seth McClintock must solve.

Spring Seraphim

The 1987-88 theatre season consisted of a fall drama, a winter musical, and last but not least, the spring comedy. The spring play, "My Three Angels," was presented on April 27, 28, 29, 30. In keeping with spring play tradition, the show was presented in the "theater in the round" style for four days, instead of three. "It's a good opportunity because both of the other two shows are done on stage, in front of the audience in the auditorium", commented junior Margaret Gray, Marie Louise, a principal character of the show. "People are so much closer to you during the show; it requires serious concentration on the part of the actors." Set in the early 1900's, "My three Angels' centers around a family of three living on Devil's Island, an island full of convicts. Three of the convicts turn out to be guardian angels that protect Marie Louise and her family from her rich, evil uncle and his nephew.

Tryouts began on March 16, but only after the announcement that the original show, "A Flea in Her Ear," was cancelled. "The show couldn't have been ready in the four weeks allotted for it. It was too complicated of a show," replied director Seth McClintock. "I had originally planned on doing "My Three Angels' at the beginning of the year, so tentative plans had already been made for it."

Something that this show lacked from the other shows was preparation time: four weeks versus eight weeks. "I try to put my more experienced actors and actresses in this type of show because I feel they can handle it," explained McClintock.

In keeping with tradition, "My Three Angels" drew in capacity audiences each night of the performance. - Taylor McCammon

The Price You Pay

As first semester finals ended, senior faces slowly relaxed. Their grades for the second semester really didn't matter to colleges, and graduation hovered only eighteen weeks away. Aaaah.

"How are you going to pay for college?" YAAAHH!

Higher education, as a far-off concern, hardly rated up to the immediate expenses of a senior year.

Follow typical senior Thatcher Jeffries through his typically expensive final months of school.

Flashback to twelfth-grade registration. West parking sticker draws first blood. He then pays the myriad book rental, pep club, and "overpriced" yearbook fees.

Through the winter, drains on Thatcher's reserves remain small, relatively speaking. He does have to shell out a few bucks on dates, and he also pays eight to fifteen dollars for the t-shirts and sweatshirts almost every organization in the school purchases, from Chorale to the varsity offensive line.

Around December and January, things start picking up. Thatch pays for his rent-a-cap 'n gown and his graduation announcements. He also pays a dollar a line for his senior summary to be placed in the yearbook. Prices are adding up, but not nearly to the level of the culmination of the senior experience, the exhilharating and oh-so-account taxing SPRING BREAK.

Assuming Mr. Jeffries returns from Padre alive, he faces only one final expense - prom. He scrapes enough out of his sandy wallet to take his date to Steak and Ale.

The day after graduation, Thatcher blearily looks at his savings and checking balance - $0.00.

Thrifty Nickels

Imagine this: two high school students walk out the door of their house. "Where are you going?" their mother asks.

"To the mall. We're looking for overcoats, jewelry, and combat boots, and whatever else interests us."

"Oh. Do you need money?"

"No, I have ten dollars," the boy replies.

. . . It doesn't happen. Not at "the mall," at least.

An increasing number of teenagers found refuge in the thrift stores in the last year, for reasons financial, and probably more importantly, of style.

National department store chains must cater to the general public and the styles they crave. Amazingly, however, a large percentage of West's student population did not find the "in" style particularly appealing. These students instead chose to create their own fashion, combining eighties ingenuity with clothing styles from as many as three different decades.

Many thrift stores are run by non-profit organizations, such as the Salvation Army, Goodwill Services, Association for the Blind, and the Junior League. These operate by selling materials donated by the community, making for an enormous variety and entirely inexpensive prices.

Many frequenters of these stores did so for reasons other than style and price. Randy Swartz, junior, said "some of the things I find are just so novel that I fall in love with them." Indeed, a tie with a small mural embossed upon it and an A.B. Dick Co. lab coat testified to thrift stores' novelty.

Whatever the reason, thrift stores became thoroughly popular for many area teenagers, creating a new class of shop-a-holics; thrift stores can be addictive.

Vike Studded

The S.M. West Vikestuds combined the old with the new this year in hopes of forging ahead in the genre of drill team parodies. This band of joyful, rhythmic renegades danced their way into the hearts of many who attended the numerous pep rallies which served as the Vikestuds showcase.

For the first time in history, tryouts were held for Vikestuds. The panel of judges consisted of Drill team captain Kim Wollnik, Principal John Krueger, two alumni, and Kent Davis and Marc Shulman, who were charged to head Vikestuds for 1987-1988. Before tryouts, another member was appointed, Chad Hartman, narrowing the chances of the would-be Vikestuds by a significant amount. These appointments drew much criticism from many who observed the group's formation. Nevertheless, tryouts came off without a hitch, and the fun began as the troupe performed at several assemblies.

This was a year of firsts for the Vikestuds. For the first time, they achieved recognition as a legitimate student group at West. This status garnered new rights and privileges. In additon, a Vikestuds manager/water boy appeared on the scene for the first time; mixed reactions ensued. Junior Randy Swartz said, "It's not very fair to those who did audition." (The manager did not try out).

It cannot be disputed that Vikestuds represents something different to everyone. Some like it-some don't like it, and some fail to realize its existence. In the words of senior Vikestud Ed Henderson,"I thought being selected was a huge ego boost, which was reason enough for me to do anything." Hopefully the changes in Vikestuds rose above the confusion and resulted in more enjoyment for all. - Adam Walker

Get A Job!

Tuesday, September 8, 3:50 p.m.- typical SM West student Hillary Johnson navigates the swift suburban traffic of 87th street as she races to take her new position on the four o'clock shift at a local burger joint. Before Hillary left, her mother told her, "Don't be silly. The brown polyester vest is very attractive. It complements your eyes."

Hillary had a hard time believing anyone would see her eyes. They'd be too busy staring at the towering stovepipe hat that had "trainee" written in big bright yellow letters on it, but Hillary really didn't care if they made her wear fresh fruit. She had a job.

Friday, September 18, 4:40 p.m.- though she is not scheduled today, Hillary stops by work. It's payday. Her manager, a junior college student named Randy "Rock-o" Bowers, begrudgingly hands Hillary a bright yellow envelope which contains an equally bright check. After realizing the chunk that went to Uncle Sam, Hillary immediately becomes an anarchist.

Thursday, December 3, 7:25 p.m.- having found a date for WPA at the last minute, Hillary phones work and tells a bold-faced lie. She explains to Rock-o that she just realized that Saturday night is her cousin's bar mitzvah, so she can't work. Rock-o buys it. Hillary feels no guilt. For $3.45 an hour, why should she?

Tuesday, January 9- Hillary receives her grade card for the first semester. Oops. Maybe twenty hours a week was too much, but now she's practically rich.

Thursday, May 26- Hillary quits, leaving the register and Rock-o behind, but keeping the hat. Who has time for a job in the summer, anyway? - Greg Belshe

Finding a hang-out under the golden arches, seniors Shannon Holtke, Laura O'Connor, and Rachel Berbiglia stop for dinner during a night out.

Hang-outs Fade

"Hang-out": the word brings to mind images of Richie Cunningham and Potsie Webber sitting at "Al's. But that was the fifties, and there isn't anything like "Al's" anymore. So where did West students "hang-out"?

One place was the bridge at school. At 2:40 students poured out of classes. Most headed straight home, but a lot of students stayed for awhile. Many students sat on the bridge talking and listening to West Radio. They didn't have anything to do or any place to go, so they collected on the bridge to socialize, which makes it "hanging out" by definition; but students can hardly hang-out at school on weekends.

The first hang-out most students ever went to was probably "the mall", either Oak Park or Metcalf South. However, upon leaving junior high most students stopped going to the mall, and began to utilize cars.

The plaza used to be a place where students could hang out, until the local authorities decided they didn't want students there anymore. Students stopped going there when they realized that a car with Johnson County plates was subject to a ticket at the smallest infraction of the law, imaginary or not.

Because of paranoia on the part of local authorities, hangouts have largely gone by the wayside. Any gathering of students numbering fifty or more became a magnet for three to four patrol cars with officers suggesting the kids go home. As a result, students could be with friends only at school or school-related functions, such as sporting events and after parties, without taking a chance of being run-out by the police. - Steve Young

Just For Fun

While most sports-minded students at West concentrated their sights on the boys and girls weekly basketball games during the winter, a select minority of students kept their interest tuned in on twelve other teams that competed at least twice a week. These twelve teams constituted the organized Intramural Basketball League, or Intramurals.

Under the supervision of gym coaches Clark Hay and Doug Brown, the program was created several years ago to give students a chance to compete in basketball for fun. "It's a chance for those boys and girls that tried out for the school's basketball teams and didn't make them," explained Clark Hay. "It's not limited to just those students, though. Anyone, in any grade can participate. The league isn't for just boys either. We've always had some girls play, also."

Over sixty students and several faculty members split into twelve teams of five members each. Names such as: "The McFallouts II", "Swish", "Hozers", "Senior Hogs", and "The Mutant Camels" were chosen by each team. Teams competed against each other every week after school in timed games with full rules in effect. "We tried to play any time the gym is available, and that wasn't all too often," Hay continued.

An extra incentive for playing intramurals proved to be the lack of a price for "joining" the league. "Most leagues make you pay a lot of money to join," commented senior Bret Scholtes, a member of the McFallouts II. "It's free to play intramurals. We have a blast every time we play. It's really worth it, both from the competition and the fun we have." - Taylor McCammon

Relieving Stress

6:20 on a Friday night, and Thatcher Jefferies needs action. Thatcher grabs his jacket and mounts his Mustang - destination unknown, but purpose definite. Thatcher wants to practice a hobby that he hopes will become a talent: the art of meeting women.

Half-way to wherever he is heading, Big Julia (his metalic-green Mustang) stalls. Thatcher coasts to a stop, opens the hood, and tinkers unsuccessfully with some hoses. Suddenly, a hero arrives. Bobby, a tall, fair-haired lad in Thatcher's science class, pulls over to lend a hand. In two minutes the car is started. "I know everything about cars. They're my hobby," says the grinning Bobby. "Working on them in my spare time is satisfying and a good way to relieve stress."

Finally back on the road, Thatcher's sixth sense (or maybe he just has overactive glands) directs him to Peggy's, the local teen dance club. When he arrives, he sees a good friend, Hillary Johnson, who takes dance classes. "It gives me something to do after school," she remarks. "Let's go to the Venture bakery and split a big cookie with a clown on it."

"Great!" Thatcher says. As fate would have it, an acquaintance named Alicia works at the cookie store. "I seem to have a flair for this," she says while finishing the clown's big, colorful shoes. Suddenly, the clown jumps off the cookie, chasing Thatcher and Hillary with a herring.

SMACK! Thatcher snaps awake, confused and unable to recall the details of his nightmare. All he does know is that he never wants to go to the circus again, and he'd better find a hobby - the stress is getting to him. - Greg Belshe

What Is Hot!

This year winter wear took on a new look as students sported leather jackets and Air Force flight jackets. Cardigans and cableknit sweaters returned over shirts, especially turtlenecks.

Scarves, tied around the waist or neck or dropped over a shoulder, became extremely popular for girls. Some, however, opted for colorful bandanas. Hair ribbons of all colors and large gold or silver earrings accentuated the various outfits.

Three brands worn by both girls and guys could be seen throughout the halls of West: ACA Joe, Corona, and Spuds Mackenzie.

Jeans cut off just above the knees made a comeback this year due to the 'must see' movie "Dirty Dancing." Worn with laceless Keds, they seemed like a flash from the past. Acid washed or weathered, jeans returned stronger this year than last.

Along the lines of footwear, boots of different styles and colors provided a means to link an outfit together. Camp shoes were also seen as well as Converse high-tops in all colors.

Guys experimented with butch haircuts and lines shaved on the side of their heads. Many girls, however, opted for a more natural look with long curly hair.

Cherry 7-Up was introduced and caught on quickly with the general public. Because of their low price and appealing taste, Chicken Littles from Kentucky Fried Chicken, and Taco Bell soft tacos, and fajitas replaced regular burgers in many instances, though chicken nuggets were still on top.

All That Jazz

Classy! This single word captured the feeling presented at the 1988 Junior-Senior Prom. Plans for this gala social event began in early November when theme was chosen. "All That Jazz" provided a simple theme with which to work. Decorations, fashioned from the highly sophisticated clubs of the Roaring Twenties, particularly "The Cotton Club", revolved around three colors: black, white, and pink. Streamers cascaded from the ceiling of the gym, trapping balloons under their beauty. The Prom Committee experimented with a black and white checkered floor and a memory book containing each couple's picture. Black and white table cloths and pink candles covered the tables surrounding the dance floor. White strings of Christmas lights added a touch of elegance to the "club". Every Thursday in November and December, Prom Committee met to discuss progress on choosing entertainment, photography, refreshments, invitations, and cost. After Winter Break, decorations were ordered and several fundraisers occured. The group consisted of about twenty devoted students under the direction of the Junior class officers: Stacy Madsen, president, Komal Chopra, vice-president, Greta Wiechman, secretary, and Barbara Shiedeler, treasurer. Mrs. Mary Jane Christian, special education teacher at West, sponsored all meetings and handled student- administration relationships. On April 23, after months of planning, couples met for a night of dinner and dancing and maybe an after-prom party. Seniors and juniors alike expected this night to be sensational, and the Prom Committee hoped to give the seniors what they deserved: the classiest night of their lives. - Stacy Madsen

Grand Finale

As Spring grows and unfolds every year, the minds of West's seniors slowly disintegrate. Senior James Davis explained the disease that is appropriately named "Senioritis."

"I've been in public school for eleven and a half years. I can see the light at the end of the tunnel. I just want to get there with as little effort and brain power as possible."

The light at the end of the tunnel for James and 629 classmates was West Commencement, the culmination of the high school experience. Everyone looked forward to walking up the aisle to the strains of "Pomp and Circumstance," but few seniors knew how much work went into the event to make it truly memorable.

Sponsored by Mr. Warren Knutson, the Commencement Committee found ushers, picked speeches, and made all the arrangements for the event.

Along with associate principle Jo Carrol, they also fought a movement to have only one district-wide commencement at Bartle Hall. Knutson was dead against the idea.

"For one thing, we'll be there all night. There are over 2500 seniors in Shawnee Mission. One graduation would take far too long. It also cuts down the personal side of Commencement. Who wants to sit by someone not even from their own school?"

James Davis, caught in the dregs of an attack of senioritis exploded, "I can't wait until we graduate!"

Well, thanks to the concentrated efforts of the Commencement Committee, James' hopes wouldn't be destroyed by a badly planned night. - Kent Davis

A New Chapter

Typical West student Thatcher Jefferies rushes out of study hall to the library to do some research for his History paper, due tomorrow. He enters the media center ready to learn, only to encounter a sea of Freshmen learning about the Card Catalog. A forbidding figure looms in front of him.

"Sorry, it's all full today - you'll have to come back tomorrow," tolls the librarian.

As of 1988, that was a scene of the past. With 10,000 square feet, West's brand-new library had plenty of space for anyone who wanted to stay and study.

Almost double the size of the previous media center, the new library added new facets to West education. Although no new books came to rest in the library, a classroom for library skills, a computer usage center, and even conference rooms for student groups appeared on the new floor-plan.

According to head Librarian Joan Gastinger, the library resulted from the old one not meeting regional accreditation standards, but Principal John Krueger put forward a different reason.

"We just needed a new one. The old library's just way to small for 2400 kids. We've had complaints from the accreditation association for a long time."

Gastinger gave rave reviews of the new study place. "In our old library, everything was so cramped - we had to turn people away all the time because there just wasn't enough room. Now we've got space to spare."

With a new storage place for books, the old space echoed emptily. Ideas for its use poured in.

"We've had suggestions for classrooms, more counseling space, even requests for a new cafeteria," Krueger sighed jokingly. What are his plans? "Let's set the books in the new one first." - Kent Davis

HOMEWORK? TONIGHT? Uh . . .

Sitting in his room at 11:00 PM, typical West student Thatcher Jeffries thinks: remember that 800-page U.S. history term paper due tomorrow? He needs a topic.

"Okay, okay. The Whiskey Rebellion. Nah. Betsy Ross' sewing needles. No. Uh, uh, uh . . . (sleep strikes)."

Thatcher has just fallen victim to that dreaded high school disease, procrastination - the idea that an infinite amount of work can be accomplished in an infinitesimal amount of time. Although the task is difficult, the disease can be cured through a few simple steps.

The most important accomplishment is to admit to yourself that you ARE a procrastinator. You probably ARE if you relate to any one of the following symptoms:

1. The Rushkies.

Finding oneself tearing down hallways with two seconds left until the bell. "I thought I could finish that last paragraph in Lifetime Underwater Basketweaving."

2. Lunchdy Hall.

Doing one's Algebra and knawing on a wood and graphite pencil while one's classmates partake of the four basic food groups. "Only wimps eat! Pass my calculator."

3. Spacing.

Despite knowledge of heavy homework load, lying on bed or floor for more than an hour and a half, thinking of irrelevant things like Padre, Carol Channing, or how the movie "Platoon" received seven Oscars.

4. The B.P.O. (Big Put-Off).

Rationalizing an un-homework activity with thoughts like, "I can watch 'Cosby' and still finish. But 'Cheers' is on after that - then 'Night Court' . . . " It's just a vicious circle.

Procrastination can be cured if that first step of admitting it is taken. However, if you just can't do it . . . "Mom, is that you? It's so cold (insert hacking cough) - but I just HAVE to go to school . . . " - Kent Davis

StuCo Enhances Spirit, Fun.

"All praise to Sal Intagliata! Blessed is our great leader! Give thanks and money to the almighty Sal!" These words could have rung through the halls of West every morning if one student, Sal Intagliata, had let power go to his head. Fortunately, Sal used his position as Student Congress (StuCo) president for good instead of evil. "I want to better unify the school and get more people involved," Sal said.

Sal's goals for the year seemed a little different from past years, as was his leadership style. The traditional StuCo structure remained, but Sal tried to keep decision-making a group project. Of his work with the other three officers, Sal said, "I am the president, but all four of us make the decisions."

Student Congress was comprised of the four officers, committee chairpersons, class officers, and class representatives. This entire group met about once a month, while the officers and committee heads all had a class seventh hour to work together on StuCo business. Ideas were brainstormed in this class and then presented to the entire body at the monthly meetings.

Of course, none of this would have been possible without the guidance of Mr. Terry Herman, StuCo sponsor; no, make that adviser. "I prefer to be called adviser," Mr. Herman said. "The club, as I see it, belongs to the students. I'm only there to advise them when they ask for it."

Throughout the year, Mr. Herman stressed the importance of good leadership. StuCo members, especially the officers, attended workshops and conferences aimed at strengthening leadership skills.

The Spirit of West

"PC loves DT." No, this sign did not pertain to some person enamored with a member of the opposite sex. This poster depicted the support the Shawnee Mission West Pep Club showed the Drill Team!

In the words of sponsor Mary Ann Mercer (affectionately known to all as "Merce"), "Pep Club supported all athletic groups. Our Pep Club here at West is the largest in the entire state of Kansas, with over eighteen-hundred members!"

Such a large organization required much planning and hard work. The Pep Club Council took responsibility for all the various duties throughout the year. This year the Council consisted of fourteen, including six senior officers and eight other members. This year the six officers, Shannon Casey, Bridgette Cerwick, Cyndy Knight, Laura Murphy, Susan Seltzer, and Tammi Wagner, met everyday during fourth hour with Merce to plan ahead and organize the various activities. They then met Mondays through Thursdays after school with the council.

This year the council decorated the bridge, the locker rooms, and the buses throughout the various athletic seasons, planned each minute of every pep assembly, organized every aspect of Homecoming and Sweetheart, and held the annual fall sports watermelon feed, winter sports lasagne feed, and spring sports ice cream social.

"This year we have super leadership from the officers," Merce added.

"We're doing something for the school," senior officer Cyndy Knight said. "Even though it's a lot of work and takes a lot of dedication and effort, it's all worth it."

The Main Attraction

It's halftime of a home football game and, as usual, West is beating the team from Nowhereville, Kansas. The crowd is already enjoying themselves, and they cheer as the main attraction takes the field, accompanied by the marching band. The S.M. West Drill Team performs its halftime flag routine for the enjoyment of the appreciate spectators. A lot went into making this moment possible. All during the football season parking in the diagonal spaces by the south-west corner of the building was limited, because the Drill Team arrived between 6:00 and 7:00 every morning, using these choice spaces. They deserved this privileldge because they spent these early hours working. They started working with the band in mid-August on the half-time routine, which also served as their competition routine.

The Drill team fared pretty well in their competitions during the school year, as well as at dance camp over the summer. Four of the girls, seniors Kim Wollnik, Michelle Bloecker, Lori Ruppelius, and junior Julie Broxson, were awarded "Superstar" awards. Only 90 of the 1,200 girls at the camp earned this award. This also meant these four were invited to perform at the Aloha Bowl in Hawaii over Christmas break, but because of Kansas Law, they weren't allowed to go. "But it was an honor just being picked to go," commented senior Kim Wollmik, who was also the Senior captain.

Boosters Lift Drill Team

For many girls at West, being a member of the Drill Team meant prestige, recognition, and fun. Their activities may have been difficult for the Drill Teamers if they had to have done it all alone. Fortunately, the Drill Team Booster Club was there to lend support to the Drill Team at West once again.

At the beginning of the school year, the Booster Club had its only full meeting to set goals and priorities for the upcoming school year. The members of the club were the parents of the thirty-nine participants in Drill Team at West. Throughout the remaining parts of the school year, a seven-member board met to coordinate the projects of the Booster Club.

One major focus of the Drill Team Booster Club was fund raising. Linda Mowell, chairperson of the fund raising committee, said that the organization sold West bumper stickers, note pads, and game programs, as well as running concession stands at sporting events to raise money. One especially lucrative fund raiser this year was a purse sample sale.

The money raised all went to help the drill team in one way or another. The Booster Club bought items of clothing for the Drill Team that were not provided by the school. New practice flags were also made for the squad, and flowers were presented for encouragement at their first performance of the year.

The Booster Club realized the value in physical support and attendance at performances, too. During football they sponsored a father-daughter dinner and in the basketball season a mother-daughter dinner was held. Sports Bolster

At times, parents of West students are as much a part of the school as the students themselves. This is evidenced by the Football Booster Club.

The Booster Club, which was organized in August, near the time of football tryouts, was open for membership to anyone interested in supporting the sports programs at West. At the first meeting committees were formed to deal with aspects of the organization such as fund-raising, parent-team relationships, and other activities of the club. As the year passed, the group met as seemed necessary by the club's chairman.

The overall purpose of the Football Booster Club is to give comprehensive athletic support to each and every S.M. West sport, not exclusively to football.

In the past year, the Boosters were active in many functions. For instance, they organized the individual and team portraits (and sold them for a profit,) and sold Viking-laden sweaters, sweatshirts, rain ponchos, and earmuffs. The funds raised in these efforts went to the purchase of team equipment for which there were no allocations in the recipient sports budget.

Some other duties of the Booster Club were: selling tickets, concessions, and handing out programs at games and meets throughout the year,complete with the name and jersey numeral of each player.

Sparking School Spirit

The jubilation over victory, the disappointment of defeat-the Varsity cheerleadering squad persevered through it all this past year. Performing at almost every Varsity athletic event, the rahs displayed their versility by presenting cheers, chants, and a multitude of stunts with their yelleaders.

Seniors Amy Neill, Nicole Zimmerman, Tracy Schmidt, Liz Rossner and Paige Doerste along with juniors Joanne Payne, Melanie Bivens, and Tracie Hunter comprised this years Varsity cheerleaders.

Anchored by captains Liz Rossner, Nicole Zimmerman, and sponser Vicki Hanson, the squad kept the pride and traditon of excellent Varsity cheering at West alive. Months before the first day of school, the rahs experimented with new routines and perfected the traditional chants and cheers.

The National Cheerleading Association's camp at Kansas University in early July gave the squad their first opportunity to show their stuff. "Camp was the first time that the group came together as one," commented junior Tracie Hunter. Pulling together proved to be the key factor as S.M. West earned three blue ribbons for superior quality in performance and two spirit sticks, awards for the highly energized squads. Topping these achievements seemed difficult, but realistic, as juniors Joanne Payne and Melanie Bivens became two of the fifteen "All-American Cheerleaders" nominees. "Being chosen as a nominee out of all of the other cheerleaders was quite a unique honor to have," stated Joanne Payne.

"To see and feel the crowd really become a part of the game because of our efforts lets us know that our goal has been achieved," remarked Tracie Hunter, "That's the best feeling experience and it's really worth it." - Taylor McCammon

Busy Rahs Boost Pep

So what do those JV cheerleaders do? Oh, just cheer at Junior Varsity and Varsity football games, right? Wrong. The duties of a JV cheerleader extended far beyond leading the crowd at a few football games.

Sponsored by Vicki Hanson, the JV rahs, Jennifer Little, Kami Phillips, Jaimie Williams, Stacy Levret, and newcomers Susan Lind andJill Turner, considered themselves in possession of a very busy schedule.

The JV squad cheered for almost every sport in which West participated. They spread out on cross-country routes and threw organized cheers from the stands at baseball games.

When not cheering, the squad fulfilled a number of tasks for sports teams. Keeping time at gymnastics meets, plus posting scores for gymnast's tallies were just a few of those tasks.

Sticking together through a lot of stress takes a very close-knit group of people, and this part of the formula might have been destroyed because of two cheerleaders on the squad who had never cheered at West.

"I was scared at first, but we're all very close now," commented new rah, Susan Lind. "We all do a lot of things together, go out to eat before games, things like that."

Why take all that time out of your schedule? "I love cheering, and I always wanted to cheer at West. It's a great way to meet people and to show my West spirit," Lind said.

For those who do so much, ironically, the JV rahs receive little recognition.

"I don't mind," Lind quipped. "We're there for the teams and for West spirit. That alone's satisfaction enough." - Kent Davis

Energizing Squads

Providing the bright smiles, the sharp moves and energetic voices for their teams, the 1987-88 Sophomore and Freshman Cheerleaders served as a steady reminder of the spirit and pride at West. "Even though the Varsity squad receives more people' s attention than the other three squads, we' ve all been there to support each other, " commented sophomore rah Julie Hillman. "That' s something I think that keeps the whole cheerleading program at West active."

While tryouts for the sophomores took place in April, freshman girls competed for positions on their squad the second week of September. Judged by Varsity cheerleaders and sponsors, Vicki Hanson and newcomer Ruthe Utt, six sophomores and eight freshmen proved themselves worthy of becoming cheerleaders.

Stacy Taylor, Kristen Wiskur, Dana Walker, Kasey Willis and co-captains Julie Hillman and Kelly Blair gave the never-ending enthusiasm needed for any game. Since three of the six rahs had never cheered at West, support and dedication came from the other three. "This year proved to be very different. Having three new cheerleaders and a new sponsor proved exciting," remarked Julie Hillman. "But I think that helped the squad more than it did hurt it. Mrs. Utt added an incredible amount of energy to the entire program. She was there whhenever we needed her."

Contrary to the sophomore squad, this year's freshman squad consisted of eight members, a change from last year's number of six: Andrea Bucheit, Christy Buchman, Meghan Thompson, Debbie Phillips, Chandra Lang, Rachelle Linthicum, Renee Linthicum, and Dawn Higgins.

"It takes a lot of time," Hillman said, "but the friendships, the games, and the crowds make cheering worth it!" -Taylor McCammon

Megaphone Men

With megaphones poised, the eight exuberant young men that formed the Viking Yell Leaders channeled their spirits toward the crowd. Boosting school spirit proved challenging, but the yell leaders dedicated themselves to bringing out enthusiasm and excitement in every crowd.

Earlier that spring, a similar energy earned the young men a spot on the 1987-88 Varsity Yell Leading squad during their tryouts. Performing a montage of twists, tosses, spins, and lifts, seniors Rick VanNote, Jason Paepke, Jeff Knight, Max Raphael, and Chris Bailey, along with juniors Matt DeGraff, Troy Zollars, and Jaison Rich made themselves known to the judges. "Finding out that I had made it gave me a feeling I've never felt before," exclaimed Jason Paepke. "I performed in front of only a few people at the tryouts, but now I'm excited that I'm doing the same thing in front of everybody at the games."

Whether they practiced with their Varsity cheerleading partners early in the morning or late at night during the summer months, the eight spirit boosters acquainted themselves with the new stunts and cheers. "Not one of us had had any previous experience, but the cheerleaders were really understanding about it," Jason Paepke commented. "I think that since none of us were any better than the others, we became close as a group, wanting to work together in a very short time."

Whether performing at a game, in a pep assembly, or at a special event, the male rahs all strove for the same common goal of promoting school spirit to the best of their ability. Jason continued, "Getting the crowd psyched and having fun at doing that is the best quality of Yell Leading." - Taylor McCammon

Grappler Spirit

During the middle of the school year six new cheerleaders appeared. These cheerleaders, the Wrestlerettes, started cheering when the wrestling season began.

Senior Wrestlerette Krissie Stevenson explained, "Unlike the other cheerleaders who cheer for an entire football or basketball team, we cheer only for the individual wrestlers, so we really get to know them well."

This year's Wrestlerettes, seniors Amy Dlugas, Michelle Hayes, Cathy Jorden, Krissie Stevenson, Misti Woodruff, and junior Devonia Caskey, chosen from a group of approximately thirty other girls, cheered for the wrestlers during the entire three-month season. Sponsored by Ruthe Utt, the Wrestlerettes not only cheered and supported the wrestlers during each meet, but also decorated the gym for the meets held at West, decorated the wrestlers' lockers, and performed in pep assemblies with the other cheerleading squads.

"This year we have excellent leadership," Mrs. Utt commented. "The girls really enjoy each other and what they're doing. I think the wrestling teams really appreciate the support and encouragement that the wrestlerettes give them."

The Wrestlerettes cheered for the wrestlers twice a week, all day Saturday, and usually one other night during the week. "I really love to cheer, and cheering for wrestling is perfect for me," Krissie Stevenson added.

"What we're really trying to do is to promote school spirit," Mrs. Utt said. "Wrestlerettes also gives six girls who would like to cheer an opportunity. I think the more students who participate in school activities, the more we all can benefit from them." -Frances Ting

Still On Top

Marching band is: early morning rehearsals, numerous contests and performances, and a five-hour-a-day marching camp in the final two weeks of summer vacation. So what is Marching Band, really?

Junior drummer Dennis Watson said, "It's an exclusive club, in a way. It is no coincidence that my friends are also in Marching Band. The fun people and exciting trips make it worthwhile."

But as the old proverb goes, all is not fun and games. Rehearsals, which ran from August 17 to October 31, began at 6:40 a.m. and lasted nearly two hours.

Performances came in great abundance. Five of West's football games were honored with the powerful sounds of the marching band at halftime. In addition, the band performed at five marching festivals throughout the month of October. The culmination came in the form of a Division I rating at Warrensburg. On the surface, a I rating at Warrensburg, although nothing to sneeze at, was no big deal. The fact that the band was even in the state of Missouri marked a radical change in Kansas law. For the first time, there was open competition between Kansas and Missouri bands.

In addition to the musical aspects of band, there is another essential art- marching. In order to learn the often difficult technique of marching, the group met for most of a two-week period preceding the start of school in Marching camp.

As is the case with many organizations at West, the Marching Band has a rich heritage; its trophy case bursts with Division I ratings and first-place awards. Obviously, a prodigious portion of the credit is deserved by the instructors. But perhaps the students' eagerness to succeed is brought about by the kinship felt and a closeness between band members. If so, it is transposed into a winning attitude. - Adam Walker

Band on the Run

Though not in the group's musical repertoire, "On the Road Again" could easily have served as the theme song for this year's Symphonic Band. Most were veterans of West's marching band; the musicians could not stay off their collective feet. The two milestone performances for the 1988 Symphonic Band took place in Wichita, Kansas, and England.

Seldom does a West band leave the state, let alone the country. That is why most of the members of the Symphonic Band who made the journey to England shared junior percussionist Scott Coulson's perception of the trip as "a once in a lifetime chance." The ten-day trek overseas was optional for the students in the band at a cost of over $700 per person. The interested Symphonic Band players were joined by members of West's Concert Band to form a troupe of over ninety students who departed for England, March 18.

The stay in Great Britain provided a mixture of sight and sound for the vagabond Vikings. The students provided the sound in three scheduled performances. England provided the sights as the performers were allowed much time for shopping and visiting points of interest such as Stonehenge and Medieval castles.

The second important journey made by the Symphonic Band represented a distinct honor. The band was chosen to perform at the annual Kansas Music Educators Association (KMEA) convention on February 26, in Wichita. The West Symphonic Band was selected from among many other high school bands throughout the state after sending in an audition tape last year.

Jamming, Expanding

Of all forms of current music, only one has its roots totally in America. That's jazz. The roots spread and grew, and one stopped at S.M. West. That's jazz band, directed by Mr. John Selzer.

In his first year as director of West Jazz, the class doubled in size from one class fourth hour to two classes. The fourth hour class taught the rudiments of jazz, while second hour became the home of West's publicly performing advanced jazz group, the Overland Express.

Interest picked up as a result of a concentrated effort by Selzer to increase jazz enrollment during his stint as assistant director to Ron McClellan, band director, during the '86-87' school year. This year, jazz was given to him as his baby.

Selzer had only taught at the middle school/junior high level, and wasn't sure of his move up to high school. "Teaching is tough work, especially with high school kids," Selzer said, "but now that I'm here, I wouldn't trade it for the world."

Jazz is a medium for improvisation, and class work reflected that philosophy. About once per week, the rhythm section played set music while the other instruments took turns making up the rest, improvising.

Junior trumpeter David Haynes characterized the class as "loose -we know when to work, but we also know when to have fun! We're a really individualized group."

To add to the jazz band's individuality, Selzer wrote a musical piece for them, the "West Eighty-fifth Street Shuffle." They finished off every concert with it.

Haynes added, "I love jazz. It gives me a lift when I'm down." It seems the roots will keep on growing. -Kent Davis

Getting In Tune

"The workers have revolted!" At least that might have been the thought of someone unfamiliar with the West Orchestra upon entering the class this year. The students were seemingly running the show. The increase in responsibility (and subsequently, work) came about through a mutual decision of orchestra members and Lelia Rodabaugh, the director.

Orchestra membership grew to nearly fifty this year. To many, it seemed an ideal time for a structural change.

Alterations, which mainly involved upperclassmen, concerned events preparatory to rehearsals and performances. Many student- filled positions were created, including Student Director and grade-level representatives to the newly-formed Orchestra Council.

One aspect of the orchestra that often goes unnoticed at West, but is definitely appreciated in the community, is the Strolling Strings, in which performers stroll through the audience while playing familiar tunes. The group performs at numerous conventions and other gatherings, usually entailing from thirty to forty shows each year. Aron Cromwell, sophomore, gave his reasons for being involved in Strolling Strings: "I'm in it for all the free food ... and the long, hot bus rides."

"Strolling really allows kids to sharpen their performance skills. The poise they learn will carry over into every aspect of performance," offered Mrs. Rodabaugh.

As in every year, many orchestra members audition for, and a few are chosen to, select orchestras across Kansas. Many others participate in contests each spring. While these musicians represent West splendidly, it is the entire orchestra as a complete body in which true pride lies. - Adam Walker

FRESHMEN BAND

On A Musical Note

As in most sports at West, the band department is divided into freshman, sophomore/JV, and Varsity teams.

The Freshman Band, consisting of freshmen members only, represented the first stage in a student's musical career at West. In order to get his students "emotionally, physically, and mentally ready for Varsity band". Mr. Ron McClellan showed them to not just be "horn-blowers, but musicians." Marching fundamentals and technical music skills provided a foundation for further musical studies. After freshmen, just graduated from middle school, began to understand musicianship, they understood McClellan's way of running things. An orientation to West, Freshman Band taught the members the meaning of hard work.

Concert Band represented the soph/JV version of West band. They performed three times throughout the year: once in the spring and winter and at the annual chili supper. They also ventured to State Festival. Concert Band, comprised of those students with a little less experience, developed musicianship. McClellan taught them to show emotion in what they played. He wanted the audience to "hear us cry, hear us laugh." McClellan beamed, "You can feel the happy, the sad, the carefree."

Over spring break, sophomore, junior, and senior band members spent an adventurous week in England. Sponsored by Band Aids, and chaperoned by Ron McClellan, John Selzer, Betty Wilkerson, and members of West administration, the group had an educational time seeing the spectacular sights of England. -Stacy Madsen

Life in the Pits

There are many facets involved in staging a musical production. "The Wizard of Oz," West's winter musical, was no exception. One very important part of every musical is its pit orchestra.

Senior pit trumpeter Brian Schoeni, enjoyed being a behind-the-scenes part of the show. "I like the theatre aspect of being in the pit. Without appearing on stage, the orchestra still makes a great contribution to the show."

The actual orchestration for the show created some interesting differences between this show and past shows. For instance, players in the orchestra generally agreed that the music was unusually easy. For many, this created a situation that allowed for extra enjoyment stemming from a decrease in pressure. Others missed the challenge which usually accompanies the score of a Broadway Musical.

The size of the pit was another abnormality. Only twenty students played in the orchestra. Although there is no standard size for a pit orchestra, they usually are in the vicinity of thirty or thirty-five. About the small size, senior Doug Schmidt said, "There aren't as many people to worry about as far as tuning goes, but on the other hand, it is a lot more demanding on the individual player." Most members found the small size agreeable, as it is usually not anonymity sought by musicians in an orchestra, but a sense that the entire orchestra functions as one.

Whatever the individual reasons were for being in the pit, it was an experience benefiting all involved. Brian Schoeni commented, "It's very fun, but at the same time a professional experience." - Adam Walker

Backstage Action

"For every hour of actual performance on the stage, there are approximately eighty hours of work put in by the crews." These words of the wise, spoken by senior Thespians President Derek Donovan, illustrate the vital roles crews play in any theatrical production.

West staged three different productions throughout the school year: "Rashomon", the fall play, "The Wizard of Oz", the winter musical, and "A Flea in Her Ear", the spring comedy. Several crews aided in the production of each performance: lighting, sound, props, construction, costumes, and publicity. The crews and the stage managers all worked together along with the members of each cast.

The crews worked every day after school during rehearsal, which resulted in background sets, the proper lighting and sound to best bring out the action on the stage, costumes designed and sewn by Jeanne Jaekely and West graduate Carla Eames, and posters advertising each produciton. This year the lights crew had the special responsibility of learning to use and program a new computerized light board, which moved West theatre into the high-tech future.

Volunteers made up all of the crews for each show. They weren't just fair-weather volunteers, either. Members of the "Rashomon" company could be found working on the elaborate set as late as 10:30 at night.

"Crews are just as important as the cast," Derek added. "The best actors in the world are not going to get anywhere without costumes, sets, sound, lighting, and props behind them." - Frances Ting

Backing the Bands

Unknown to most of its students, West housed the largest collection of Band-Aides in the district. Not the band-aides that you put on a cut, the Band-Aides at West were comprised of parents who supported the marching band, orchestra, jazz band, and concert band.

To organize that extra nudge of support, Band-Aides elected its own officers. This year's officers included President Barbara Thompson, Vice Presidents Jim and Jan Grossi, Secretary Connie Sasse, Treasurer Jim Hillman, and Assistant Treasurer Jim Tousley.

Besides providing much needed moral support, Band-Aides also provided financial assistance. In the past, the group has purchased many necessities, including new instruments, new sound systems, and shirts. This year proved no different.

To raise money for the organization, volunteers launched various fund raisers. From the traditional opening bonfire in the fall to the annual chili supper, the necessary funds accumulated throughout the year.

The highlight of the year for students and parents alike was the eagerly awaited trip to London, England, during spring break. "Parents and their students were really enthusiastic about the trip," stated Mrs. Thompson. "It's that type of enthusiasm that keeps Band-Aides and the musical groups going."

The annual banquet, held at the end of the year, served as a time for students to show their appreciation for the laborious hours their parents had contributed. As senior Brian Schoeni commented, "The music programs at West are big. Musicians are like any other group; they need support. Who better to give that support than the parents?" - Taylor McCammon

Voice In Control

Many people like to join in and sing a duet with the voice on the radio, whether they are in their car alone or in the shower. When they sing along, people usually do so alone, because they realize that they don't have the golden voices of Whitney Houston or Linda Ronstadt. However, not everyone fits into this grouping. The Freshmen Girls' Choir was full of girls who had the voices to sing out in public unabashedly.

Besides not being tone-deaf, what does it take to become an accomplished singer? Practice, and lots of it. One of the first things the Freshmen Girls' Choir worked on was voice control. During normal speech, no one tone is held for any length of time. While singing, such things as breath control, mouth shaping and inflections of voice had to be controlled perfectly. In only its second year, The Freshmen Girls' Choir supplied the Chorale with many singers who not only had developed their voices and talents fully, but who were also familiar with the kind of work it takes to sing well. In the future, the Freshmen Girls' Choir hopes to keep providing the Chorale with experienced singers, eventually having seniors with four years of training, rather than three, thus advancing the level of proficiency in the Chorale.

The Freshmen Girls' Choir also had the benefit of William Oldham, who instructs the Chorale as well. He earned an exemplary reputation during his twenty-six years at West of getting the most of his students. Under his instruction, the Freshman Girls' Choir should earn a reputation for excellence comparable to that of the chorale. - Steve Young

Sans Accompaniment

Do you like to sing? Does performing in front of a crowd to express your talent interest you? If you answered 'yes' to either question, Acapella Choir just might be for you.

Every day during sixth hour, freshmen, sophomores, juniors, and seniors devoted their time to performance skills in room 151. Mr. William Oldham began each day with a warm-up exercise, usually vocal scales. Then, they would begin to sing pieces of music chosen for their next performance. They sang some folk and some contemporary pieces and began working on Christmas songs and a Broadway tune early in November.

The choir performed for the first time on October 29, along with the two other West choirs, for an audience of parents, students and the public. Ms. Klausen, a student teacher from Kansas University, conducted "Flying Free", a song performed acapella.

Although Acapella means singing without accompagniment, Ms. Klausen and Mrs. Sneegas both accompanied the choir during practices. Before performances, the girls and boys separated under the instruction of Mr. Oldham and Ms. Klausen to perfect various parts.

Each Thursday, Mr. Oldham allowed his students to bring their favorite contemporary records and tapes to class. This enabled students to share their various musical tastes with one another.

Junior Angie Tomes expressed her feelings towards Acapella, "I love to sing. I hope to learn enough this year from choir to gain a positon in Chorale my senior year."

Rouding Up Talent

Mention of the word "disharmony" to most inhabitants of West conjures up images ranging from nuclear war to a boxing match to a car accident. If music is involved at all, it is probably in conjunction with the apocalyptic scene of rock innovator Jon Bon Jovi missing that really high note on his guitar and ending up with a sound reminiscent of a sick goat.

Disharmony poses a more serious concern for West's premiere vocal group, Chorale, which last year had sophomore singers among its ranks for the first time.

The addition of sophomore Chorale members came about because of the move of freshmen students to the high schools in 1986. This allowed freshmen to get their first taste of the West vocal department and audition in the spring for Chorale, all while still a ninth grader. Of course, opening up the field increased competition. Jennifer Donovan, one of the eight sophomore Chorale participants, said, "The juniors and seniors were mad because we forced out some upperclassmen, but they've been nice. They really accepted us quite well."

But what did the upper classmen have to say about this? "The sophomores kind of changed it, made it more immature. Well, really, some of the seniors are more immature than the sophomores," said senior and two-year Chorale veteran Matt Hawkins. As in past years, the Chorale performed at various locations, including churches, nursing homes, and other schools, in additon to their four evening performances at West.

These presentations benefited not only the school and community, but also the students. In his 26th year at West, Chorale director Bill Oldham said, "Basically I'm not here to train musicians. I want students to enjoy choral music as an avocation." - Greg Belshe

What's My Line?

Transforming the auditorium of West into a theater that, according to area critiques, nears Broadway excellence would appear to be a task for professional actors and actresses. But for nine nights out of the year, that conversion took place with the help of our Thespian troupe.

Named after ancient Greek actor Thespus, International Thespian Troupe 2413 constituted the backbone of the Drama Department at West. Recognized for their exemplary efforts on and off the stage, this year's troupe consisted of thirty members, a number that doubled last year's record number of members. "Two years ago we only had seven members; now we are up to thirty," explained senior troupe member Derek Donovon. "Since we had such a great number of members, we had that much more talent and ability that could be utilized. It's a big plus for the shows."

To become a potential Thespian, one must have earned ten Thespian points, the equivalent to having worked or performed in three productions. After receiving the required amount of points, individuals took place in an initiation at the annual Thespian Banquet held in the spring.

Led by president Derek Donovon, vice-president Kent Davis, secretary/treasurer Kim Taylor, and sponsor Mr. Seth McClintock, this year's Thespian motto, "Act well your part, there all honor lies", kept the troupe a close-knit group at West. As junior Laura Gallagher commented, "It's great to know that we all have one common interest, a love for theater and the people we get to meet and know." -Taylor McCammon

Shining Support

Microphones, make-up, scenery, and the spotlight are vital to a performer while on stage, but the spotlight can aid actors and actresses off stage as well in the form of Spotlighers.

Spotlighters, comprised of parents and patrons of the arts, strove to give support for all of the performing arts at West. Originally formed three years ago for the support of the Theater program, the organization has grown steadily since. "We originally started with just a handful of parents," explained Ann Beadle, president of Spotlighters. "Now we are up to a point where we are able to cover all of the arts, instead of concentrating our efforts on one."

Heading the organization to make sure that task was completed, Spotlighters had officers: President Ann Beadle, Vice-President Judy Knapp, Secretary Susan Vote, and Treasurer Jess Cole.

The group met four times during the year. A month before each of the theater's productions, members at the meetings concentrated on how they could offer their assisstance in the most effective way. The effects of their aid could be felt at almost every performance. During the year, the Spotlighters served dinner to the cast and crew after dress rehersals for all three productions and hosted receptions after vocal concerts.

"It is important for students to know that parents are there to support any endeavors in theater and musical performance," Mrs. Ann Beadle added. "We are here to support students in any way we can." -Taylor McCammon

The constant support and encouragement of West theatre parents help keep actors like Aaron Ball and Chris Martin in the spotlight.

Civil Argumentation

The average student's image of a debater is generally not one of eccentricity. Although an alteration was not necessarily intended, some slight changes in the program were effected. For instance, Mahlon Coop, coach at West for seven years, and this year's squad, garnered the nickname "Wailin' Mahlon and the Cross-Exers." The name suggested a subtle change in demeanor which resulted in a large increase in the squad's success.

With a more stringent approach came better attitudes and stronger work ethics, two essentials for a successful debater.

Each year, the National Forensics League chooses a topic for debate for high schools nationwide. This year's topic was "That the United States Government should adopt a policy to increase political stability in Latin America," a topic thoroughly enjoyed by advanced debaters, but one that often proved too difficult for novices. "I love the Latin America topic because of its broad base. There is a virtually infinite number of pros and cons. For a research hound like me, it is ideal," commented senior David Mitchell.

After receiving the topic, teams of two debaters began the search for an irrefutable affirmative case, or one which supported the resolution. Upon hearing the affirmative team's case, the negative opposition began to outline faults and reasons for the affirmative plan's lack of validity-hence, the debate.

Student's Shine

The Forensics squads of the past three years at S.M. West left quite a legacy, capturing three consecutive state championships, the first time that any school has accomplished that feat. So what would it take for the 1987-1988 squad to continue that success? According to Sally Shipley, Forensics coach and sponsor, an intense commitment and many hours of work.

The Forensics program consists of three classes, each of which houses over thirty students. Class time is passed with roll-call questions which teach thinking on one's feet, improvisation for improving poise, and performance of scripts, which is the culmination of the class preparation. During the second semester, various tournaments are hosted throughout the area. Last year West compiled a perfect undefeated record.

To the coaches and teachers of Forensics-Shipley, Mahlon Coop, and Bob Lane-the focal point lies not in the competition, but in what students learn about themselves from the experience. "It prepares for every aspect of life," claimed Shipley. "A kid realizing a fault of his can correct it, and in the same way, good qualities can be augmented incredibly."

Students often find themselves writing notes or cards to people whom they have never met. Other activities on correlating ideas all serve specific purposes. For instance, students learn to work with all types of individuals. All stereotypes are, ideally, removed from the atmosphere, and every class member should be an essential, functioning part of the class machine.

"The real strength (of Forensics) lies not in the wins and losses, but in a kid's attitude changing from individualism to a very special team feeling." So sayeth Sally Shipley. - Adam Walker

Speakers Earn Degrees

Football stars may gain fame, glory, and respect, but they must wear heavy pads, and tight pants, only to roll in the grass with opposing players. Junior Ben Rhau earns all the same benefits the easy way: membership in the National Forensics League. "It's a great way to meet babes," Ben said.

Students involved in debate and forensics contests earn awards called degrees by accumulating NFL points. As more points are gained through competition higher degrees are given to the student. Keeping records of point totals for the West NFL chapter equals no small task, considering that West houses the largest chapter in the state.

As president of the NFL at West, Chris Riffer shouldered much of this bureaucratic burden. Throughout the debate and forensics seasons, Chris also worked to lead the West squad to new heights. "You're ranked in the nation more on points, not on members," Chris explained. "I would hope to get us back up to second and possibly even first in the nation."

Sally Shipley worked closely with Chris as the sponsor of NFL. This position meant extra work for the forensics teacher, but Mrs. Shipley finds motivation in helping students. "The kids realize the prestige of being an NFL person. It's amazing how many politicians will mention when they speak that they were an NFL member," she said.

Serving as vice-president of NFL, Jennifer Stenfors sees the club as a way to increase interest in forensics-related activities. "It motivates people to get involved," she said. Judging from the size of this year's chapter, NFL once again fulfilled this goal and kept spirits high for West forensics.

Parents Provide Support

Ways I'd like to help at West: luncheons, chaperone for parties, library assistant, etc.

This simple questionnaire, accompanied by a $2.50 due, insured membership in Parent Teacher Association, both nationally and locally. A percentage of these dues transferred into national funds, while the rest remained at West. Collected dues provided aid and fundings for the many clubs and activities at West. "There is no abundance of funds in the treasury," President Judy Harl explained. "However, we hope to have some to offer when clubs need it."

Monthly board meetings in the library took place under the direction of Mrs. Harl, Roxanne Hillman, vice-president, Libby Schoeni, second vice-president in charge of membership, Kaye Wise, secretary, Michael Rissler, treasurer, and Fran Miland, assistant treasurer. Parents, faculty, students, and the public discussed monthly projects and expressed areas of need.

PTA sponsored six after game parties on the bridge: four during football and two during basketball. One such party traditionally occured on Homecoming and the Sweetheart Dance celebrated Valentine's Day. PTA also provided an after-Prom party to allow students to stay later in a safe environment. With the help of Senior class officers, Senior Sizzle appeared on the last day of school for seniors and their dates.

PTA parents tackled many responsibilities such as: newsletters, bus passes, and concession stands. They also offered their services to West librarians and attendance center. In addition this year, parents handled telephone calls to set up parent-teacher conferences. - Stacy Madson

Yearbooking-The Saga

Five weekends of the school year, forty students gave up consideration of relaxation and invaded an unsuspecting family's home. Residing there sometimes on Friday night and always Saturday and Sunday, the intruders gradually reduced their place of occupancy to a huge pile of paper, photographs, steroes, computers, food, and frazzled emotions. Meet the darker side of West's yearbook, SAGA; the deadline weekend.

"Building a 328 page book from the ground up is a huge task." said SAGA editor-in-chief Kristin Mueller. "We have five deadlines this year and although our fourth hour class time is useful, it's impossible to finish one-fifth of the yearbook without using outside time."

That's where deadline weekends came into play. They served as a catch-all for pictures not found or copy lost, names indexed incorrectly or pages that somehow were left out.

Such is some of the work involved in the making of the book you hold in your hands right now.

Preparation for the '87-'88 SAGA began in the Spring of 1987 when that year's staff picked this year's co-editors, Kristin Mueller and Staci Hill, both seniors. They, along with Heather Herrin, Chris Black, and Kent Davis, who edited photography, art, and copy and theme, respectively, attended the Iowa State Journalism Workshop in Ames, Iowa. While working there, they decided upon SAGA theme this year, "Staying on Top."

Why decide to take such a harrowing job as producing your yearbook? Ask Heather Herrin. "The memories I'll have from making this book will block out all the work. I love SAGA." - Kent Davis

High-Tech Epic

Perhaps next year the bathrooms at West will be computerized. If current trends toward an expansion of technology use continue, this could become a distinct possibility. One indication of this high-tech transition was the new computerized production utilized by The Epic.

In a move designed to overhaul the journalism program at the high school level, the district spent thousands of dollars to provide the most modern equipment in desk-top publishing. The Epic received two Apple Macintosh computers and a software package called Quark Express. This system enabled staff members to set all type and lay out all pages in the computer.

To make best use of the new technology, the traditional newspaper format was replaced with a news-magazine style. The Epic was published monthly, representing a decrease from last year's bi-monthly production, but issues contained more pages and more in-depth reporting. "It's a better look for the paper. People like reading it better," said associate editor Chris Fisher.

As with any change, the transition to computerized production was not without problems. The typesetters, occupying newly created staff positions, were required to become almost immediately able to use a machine that requires 40 hours of training to master. "It's a lot more difficult; we have to typeset everything ourselves. We can't blame the printer for mistakes. We're responsible for every printed word," said editor in chief Kara Grisamore.

The staff of The Epic overcame these problems, however, and produced a debut issue within the first month of school, quite an accomplishment considering the change in format. "I feel good about the new Epic," said Chris, vocalizing the pride of the staff. - Greg Belshe

Creative Outlet

Stories, pictures, and artwork, all published in a neat little magazine. "What's so different about that?" one might ask. It was published by West students for West students, with material contributed by West students. With the unique name "Out of Hand," the literary magazine was awaited by students and faculty alike.

Joan Kersnowski again was the sponsor of this group. This year there were two student editors, Beth Russell and Heather Savio, one for each issue. The group met every Thursday after school (and every day when the deadline drew near) to work on the magazine. The group spent much of this time deciding which material was going in and proofreading the articles and stories, after which they needed to work on the layouts and details about the printing. Because she was experienced in this aspect, Mrs. Kersnowski organized this, and taught the students how to do it as well.

Out of Hand gave students a unique opportunity. Students whose creativity was overflowing found the outlet for their talents. Although students wrote for Saga and Epic, in these formats they weren't free to write on their choice of subjects. Out of Hand also accepted pictures and artwork which, like the writing, could be on a variety of subjects. The most prolific form of expression was poetry, possibly because students could write it for no other school-sponsored literary forum. All of these things were done to showcase the talents of artistic individuals. Out of Hand served as a showcase for art produced at West. It truly was "Art for art's sake." - Steve Young

Literary Pride

Many organizations at West have larger national or international affiliates that its members can join. West's Thespians are part of the International Thespian Society, West's DECA is part of the National DECA organization, and West's NHS is also a branch of a national organization. What about journalism? There are three journalism outlets for students to publish at West: Sage, Epic, and Out of Hand. Participants in these organizations had the opportunity to become members of Quill and Scroll, a national journalism organization for high-school students.

Judy McMahan, the Saga advisor, Henry Aiman, the Epic advisor, and Joan Kersnowski, the Out of Hand advisor, each nominated those members of the organizations deserving the honor of Quill and Scroll membership. Then, in the second semester of the year, an awards ceremony took place, attended by all five Shawnee Mission High Schools. At the ceremony, new members were presented membership cards and pins. Then, the results of the district literary contest were revealed.

The members received a year's subscription to the magazine, Quill and Scroll. The magazine recognized the noteworthy, and also gave pointers to those wishing to touch-up their journalistic ability.

Refining Leadership Skills

Throughout the year, West's NJROTC unit, identifiable by their periodic wearing of military uniforms, was called upon to break out the rifles and defend our school's honor. Fortunately, these defenses came on a drill field, not a battle field, in military drill team competitions.

The precision drill team was only one part of West's NJROTC, or Naval Science Junior Reserve Officer Training Core, program. The two main branches were made up of the naval science classes and extra-curricular activities relating to the navy. One goal of the program was to help students decide if a career in the military suited them. According to Captain Mike Lavin,who served as coordinator of NJROTC at West for his sixth year, students gained much more from participation in NJROTC. "In class we teach the theory and ideas and background of leadership. The NJROTC program gives you a chance to practice that," Capt. Lavin said.

Apparently, the students learned their lessons well. Much of the organization was run by the students. This included planning trips to military sites, fund-raising, and drill team and rifle team activities. The rifle team, using 22-caliber rifles, practiced every Tuesday to improve their aim for competitions.

Kristen Dinges took a great responsibility as executive officer and second-in-command overall. Did Kristen ever have trouble with budding male chauvinists? "No, they usually listen really well because they know that I've earned my position."

Media For Service

As the multitude of students starts to gather on the bridge at about 7:10, music emanate from the small radio booth on the west side of the bridge. Later that day in study halls and advisory periods, the students stop what they're doing to watch a news program that focuses on West and West students. After school, many of the students who have tele-cable may watch a similar, albeit more professional, news program that also spotlights S.M. West. All three of these events were possible because of Radio/TV class, taught by Sally Shipley and Leon Smith.

The radio booth on the bridge was probably noticed by students more often than the TV shows, because they had daily contact with it, before school, after school, and during lunches. Tucked between the variety of tunes, the public service announcements made by the up-and-coming student DJ's gave useful information about school.

But the bulk of Radio/TV talent went into the weekly and cable TV shows. Students learn how to do at least one thing before leaving the class, in the immortal words of Sally Shipley, "Problem Solve!" Since very often unexpected problems with cameras arose, the students learned responsibility by not giving up. It took mass coordination to get footage, stories, and editing done on time, but trhe shows always got done, and they were generally well received by the students and faculty.

The cable shows offered a bit more of a challenge than the ordinary weekly shows. They had to be done on a strict time-schedule, as well as adhere to many restrictions about what could and couldn't be broadcast. Senior Krissie Stevenson, who co-produced the first cable show commented, "It's a lot of work, but when it all comes together, it's something to be proud of." - Steve Young.

Welcome to Kansas!

Imagine adapting to a foreign country, adjusting to different customs, foreign language, and strange people! Fortunately, for foreign exchange students, West's International Club provided a haven and a place to meet other students. "We're here to help the exchange students," senior officer Kim Taylor-stated. "They are the most important part of the organization."

This year West's nine foreign exchange students, Geir Anthonisen, Trond Aresan, Marta Diaz-Agariaga, Ann-Helen Senslend, Kjersti Solheim, Soren Sonderby, Jose Fernandez, Mirja Iannuccelli, and Esther Lopez-Monje received a warm welcome from over one-hundred and fifty members!

The year also marked a change in the leadership of the club. Instead of the usual co-presidents and a Secretary and Treasurer, a council of eight headed the group. The council, made up of seniors Delin Cormeny, Maria Hansen, Traci McGuffin, Rachael Nielsen, Laura O'Conner, Lisa Sasse, Monique Swyer, and Kim Taylor, under the guidance of sponsor Larry Yocom, planned several activities throughout the year. The members took the exchange students to Octoberfest at Worlds of Fun, various haunted houses in celebration of Halloween, (Kansas City culture!) and a special Mardi Gras party in February.

"The club is really special because we get to know about the cultures of the exchange students as well as teaching them about ours," Kim stated. "We want the exchange students to get involved in the various West social activities," officer Monique Swyer added. As Esther Lopez-Monje, exchange student from Barcelona, Spain, commented, "I like to meet new people and friends. The World of Business

Where do tomorrow's top executives, entrepeneurs, leaders, and advertisers come from? Why, from DECA, Shawnee Mission West's Marketing organization, of course!

DECA, Distributive Education Clubs of America , allowed its members to put their retailing, supervising, financial, and economic skills to use. Members of DECA were students enrolled in Marketing I and II classes.

"Students have the opportunity to see what the world of business is like and whether they like the field or not," instructor and sponsor of Deca, Mrs. Roberta Pennington, explained. Students received training emphasizing the values of teamwork, leadership, and motivation.

Students enrolled in Marketing I learned the fundamentals of retailing, promoting, and advertising, as well as a basic knowledge of economics, while seniors in the more advanced Marketing II class worked on display cases, supervisory skills, international marketing, and a research project which usually concerned some type of promotion.

This year Mrs. Pennington sponsored and organized a four-day trip to New York city for DECA students concentrating on the area of Apparel and Accessories. They had the chance to speak directly to merchandise buyers and visited several retail stores, which provided them with a unique learning experience.

The marketing classes and the organization itself combined to give students a thorough knowledge and experience of business. As senior DECA member Sue Tomc stated, "From Marketing and DECA I have learned not only how to deal with customers, but I've also learned about myself and the goals I plan to set for my future." - Frances Ting

Office Wise

Hillary Johnson, a student at West, awakes to the normally unpleasant buzzing of her 6 a.m. alarm. Oddly it is a weekday morning in early summer. This day, however, is special because it marks the beginning of the hunt for her first job.

After much thought, Hillary has decided that her ideal workplace is to be an office setting, mainly because of the atmosphere. A small problem arises: young Hillary has no training and her resume looks like the Chiefs' game plan.

"Gee, kid, I'd like to let you on, but you don't type, you can't alphabetize, and you don't know the machinery. Your phone skills are excellent, however. Sorry babe. You should probably enroll in the Office Education Association at school."

OEA members learned not only how to write a good resume, but also its importance. In addition to resumes, students were instructed in the proper interviewing technique, office management, interpersonal relations, and basic familiarity with office machinery, such as word processors, microcomputers, telephones, calculators, and transcription machines.

Throughout the year, OEA participated in many different business and professional workshops and seminars around the city and state. Included in these were a salesmanship practice drive and statewide financial competitions.

Due to the highly competitive nature of the office-work field, Office Education seems entirely necessary for students aspiring to office-work or secretarial positions. - Adam Walker

And The Answer?

The great English philospher Francis Bacon once said of knowledge, "For knowledge, too, is itself a power." After school, most students preferred to leave that power and knowledge that they acquired during the week in their textbooks and classrooms. For fifteen students, however, bringing that knowledge out of their heads proved enjoyable and very competitive. Who might these astute students be? The members of this year's Catagories team at West.

Sponsored by counselor Mike Helmer, Categories pitted the intellect of West against the district's other high schools, along with Blue Valley, Blue Valley North, Olathe North and Olathe South, in a monthly competition. Similar to the board game Trivial Pursuit, two schools competed in a battle of wits and superiority of knowledge. Preparing for the matches, the team practiced every Monday after school. Students tested each other in areas of geography, literature, mathematics, and general information. "It's amazing how much new information I, myself, have learned just by being the sponsor," Mr. Helmer commented.

This year's squad, led by returning senior Jonas Lee, was comprised primarily of novice juniors and seniors. "Though we were quite inexperienced, we steadily improved through the year," Mr. Helmer explained.

In addition to heading for the playoff tournament, held at the end of the season, travelling to Topeka for the "High-Q" Competition, a huge categories-type competition made up of hundreds of teams state wide. As Mr. Helmer stated, "Contrary to most students' thoughts, learning facts can really be enjoyable." - Taylor McCammon

Fun With Numbers

Did you ever wonder why you had to take math classes from first grade on? Did you ever ask yourself why you had to learn all about algebra, geometry, trig, and calculus-and why you would need these courses to succeed in life? Well, despair no more. The answer has been found: to compete in West's Mathletics team!

In every Mathletics competition, students rummaged through their personal knowledge of mathematical equations, like our favorite, the Pythagorean Thereom. So how about the quadratic equation? And the distance formula? These and many other equations provide the answers to several questions in Mathletics competitions.

"We have a very strong and experienced team this year," sponsor Bee Ellington commented. "We have several strong returning seniors along with many talented juniors and sophomores who will be able to continue the traditions of excellence in West Mathletics next year."

The West Mathletics team competed once a month in district competitions, along with two major competitions in Emporia and Pittsburg. This year the team also competed in the Kansas City Area Teachers of Mathematics contest in the spring, which took place here at West.

"Mathletics is the idea of combining people's wits to work together to solve a common problem," senior Phillip Miller said. "Competition gives you personal satisfaction and increases your self-esteem as you use your knowlege to solve a wide variety of math problems."

Bee Ellington added, "Mathletics is a student-inspired organization. The students organize it and participate in it because they want to. And because they want to do it and motivate themselves to do it, they succeed in doing it well, also." - Frances Ting

"We're trying to keep people aware that drinking and driving is a big problem everywhere," SADD (Students Against Driving Drunk) president Alison Sneegas cited. "Our purpose is to inform students about the responsibilities involved in drunk driving."

This year the number of students who participated in SADD increased dramatically compared to the past few years. This year the members elected officers: Barbie Dalton, senior, Michelle Garvin, senior, Robynn Keefer, sophomore, Tiauna Phillips, sophomore, and Alison Sneegas, sophomore. SADD also had a new sponsor, Child Development teacher Careta Poe.

SADD organized several activities throughout the year. An all-school SADD party took place in the fall. Members held a bake-sale and poster contest (sponsored by MADD, Mothers Against Drunk Driving), and sold Christmas cards with laminated quarters in them, stating that if you ever needed to call a friend to drive you home or if you needed to call someone for help about a drinking problem, here would be the quarter to make that most important phone call.

The members of SADD participated in the statewide SADD convention held on October 23 and 24, participating for the first time, and they also visited several area middle schools to stress the importance of not drinking and driving.

"High School is a good place for SADD to be," Alison Sneegas added. "Basically it's in high school when the problem of drinking begins. We're not here to say 'You can't drink,' we're just here to keep students aware of the problem and to develop a sense of responsibility." - Frances Ting

Selection Altered

On Tuesday, Novermber 24, about 100 juniors and seniors were tapped during first and second hours at West. These students were not forced to give blood by StuCo. They were not poked lightly on the shoulder by the student behind them. On this morning, the tapping indicated that these students had been accepted as members to the West chapter of the National Honor Society.

The new members became the first products of a revised selection process. The most obvious change, announcing new members in the fall instead of the spring, was made to give students a longer membership in NHS. Members not tapped until their senior years now had a chance to enjoy NHS membership for several months instead of several weeks.

The second major change entailed a stiffening in the membership qualifications. Students are now required to have a 3.5 grade point average, an increase from 3.3, to even be eligible for NHS. Potential members were then nominated by teachers and ranked in the four areas of scholarship, service, character, and leadership. To be elected, students also had to fill out an application listing activities and leadership positions to assist teachers in selection. These guidelines were changed to account for the extra grade point given in honors classes and to give teachers a reference of a student's involvement.

"NHS helps students become more a part of the school, not just part of an activity," said Jonas Lee, president of NHS. - Greg Belshe

Close Team Defeats Injuries

Room 43. The depths of West. Only two groups of people ever see this room. One - the Driver's Education students, and two - West's football team, watching films. They use the classroom after hours, far after the last rerun of Gilligan's Island or Leave It to Beaver is over for the couch potatoes at home, when the world outside the window in the hallway is already dark.

Why spend so much time on a game? To the players, the answer seemed simple - it's the "Eye of the Tiger," the team's theme during the past year. Head Coach Harold Wambsgans explained, "The eye of the tiger is the competitive edge we need. We have what it takes."

With a team riddled by injuries in the early going, including the loss of starting quarterback Bill Breckenridge, senior, it seemed like a tall order. However, Wambsgans was confident in his team. "Right now, we're only concerned over things we can control. Depth in our skilled positions is one of our strengths, and we'll reflect that."

Although uncertain with a new line coach in William Leonard and a new secondary, West's defense reflected nothing but strength in the last half of the season. Holding nationally ranked Rockhurst scoreless for three quarters and shutting out number one Kansas-ranked Lawrence.

The team also showed togetherness, an attitude cultivated by the coaches and seniors, who the coaches looked to for leadership on and off the field. Doug Schwabauer, senior monster-back, summed up the consummate senior attitude.

"To win, we need the juniors' support - this is a team. Things aren't separated - seniors over here, juniors over there. Everyone's together. You can't win when you're not." -Kent Davis

JV Thrives in the Shadows

The West Junior Varsity football team may have lived in many shadows, but that did not keep the players from thriving. The shadow of fame and notoriety cast by the Varsity team may not have seemed like a good environment for growth, but with their sights set for a Varsity position next year, the JV players worked hard to improve their games. The tradition of football excellence at West also loomed largely above these players, but it also gave them another reason for dedication.

A major goal of the Junior Varsity program was to prepare the players who in the next season would be helping West football to stay on top. JV also helped to prepare the Varsity team for games by practicing with them everyday after school, except game days. "We try to imitate the offenses and defenses of opposing teams," said Junior Varsity quarterbackChad Collier. "We are their meat squad."

The Junior Varsity team also had to be ready at all times with players able to fill in for injured Varsity players. The JV players all suited up for Varsity games and many got chances to play. Chad Collier saw some action as Varsity quarterback. "It's different than JV because you've got the stands, all the people, and a lot more adrenaline," Chad said.

Every Monday following the Varsity games, the JV teams played the Junior Varsity teams from other schools. These games provided an opportunity for the JV players to have their own spotlight and apply what the coaches had taught them. "I stress that players should do their best on every down and be consistent," said JV coach Bill Leonard. Mr. Leonard shared coaching responsibilities with Dave Smith.

Dedicated coaches influenced players. "West football teaches you to make a commitment," said Chad. - Greg Beishe

Vikings Snap Into Action

While quite a few students dedicated themselves to achieving the deepest and darkest tan those last precious weeks of August, a number of young men dedicated themselves and their bodies in preperation of the upcoming 1987-88 sophomore and freshman football season. Attending the summer weight program along with the Varsity and Junior Varsity squads, the two underclassmen squads began their trek of high school level football at West. For most of the sophomores, this year constituted their second in the program. "There is a definite advantage for those sophomores who have already been through our program as a freshman," stated freshman coach Gary Scott, "The freshman year in high school can serve as a valuable learning experience and will carry an impact if they choose to go on to the Varsity level."

Jason Mueller and Gary Scott coached the Freshman Black, or "A" team and the Gold, or "B" team, while Clark Hay, Don Alpaugh, and Doug Brown led the Sophomore Black and Gold squads. All of the coaches strove hard to develop the attitude that winning wasn't everything. Hay commented, "At this level, we are trying to teach the fundamentals of the game as well as establishing the system we work with at West. We don't ask that winning be our main goal, but instead a certain amount of self-discipline is used in trying to attain success. Being successful doesn't always mean winning. Our goal is geared for the preparation of the players for Varsity play in the future. Having almost all of the coaches teach here at school helps in that preparation."

The divided squads took on a challenging schedule that helped to develop their goals. Their opponents included Aquinas, Blue Springs, and Rockhurst as well as the Shawnee Mission high schools.

Dribbling Towards State

In the French language, futball means soccer. On a competitive level in America, both sports become extremely aggressive. West Varsity soccer team showed no exceptions in their performance this year. Led by returning lettermen Ray Fuller, Bernie Arzu, Craig Roy, Chad Hartman, Randy Royer, Tug McTigue, Mark Bishoff, Dirk Carroll, and junior Shawn Hobson, the season began with two victories at the Kansas City Invitational Tournament. Two new seniors, Trond Arensen, an exchange student from Norway, and Frank Keleman added an outstanding plus for the team. The team spent about two and a half hours every day practicing on mistakes made in previous games.

"We have a solid senior defense in the back, so that is one of the reasons why our scores are keeping the other teams way down," head coach Gordon Wetmore proudly explained. Assistant coaches Tim Wetmore and John Carroll provided extra support for the team. "If they aren't supportive of their members, they have to deal with a kind of an opponent on their team," G. Wetmore explained how important it was to experience unity on the field; "They have to work together."

"We go out together. We do things together on weekends. Sort of like one big happy family," Junior Jim Rahto commented on the closeness of the team. "We plan to take state, but injuries are hurting us. One guy's out for the season, and a couple are out for a game. Personally," he added with a smile, I plan on scoring some goals!"

G. Wetmore summed up his goals for the varsity season: "We'd like to peak and find the best players are working together, so we will be able to find unity. All the group will be working together, so we will be playing our best soccer at state. - Stacy Madson

JV Develops Soccer Talent

A severe personal difference among the players on West's Junior Varsity soccer team caused the team to use separate dressing rooms. This was the only solution, considering the permanance of the conflict; two of the JV players were girls. According to team members, this sexual difference caused no other serious problems. Though the team did not have a spectacular record, the JV players remained up-beat and determined. This is typical of a team characterized by their coach as "strange."

A season marked by consistently narrowly missing the mark of victory was frustrating for West's junior varsity team. Over the first ten of the season's sixteen games, JV compiled a misleading record of 1-5-4. Most of the games were close, low-scoring contests. This revealed the major weaknesses of the team, according to the players and coach: the lack of effective scorers. The continued determination in these conditions showcased the major strength of the team. According to coach John Carroll, "They are impossible to discourage."

Kathy Carbrey, junior, and one of two female JV players, still believed in her team. "We had a great team, we just didn't score goals," Kathy said.

Other players, such as junior Brian Gregory, saw other problems with the team. "Overall, we had a decent team, but nobody was serious."

Though crowds increased over last season, spectator support for the Junior Varsity soccer team remained minimal. "The players try harder when they're being watched," Brian said.

Keys to the continued determination of the Junior Varsity soccer team were their goals to play on Varsity next year and acceptance of their coach's philosophy. "Development is more important than winning," Coach Carroll said. - Greg Belshe

Working Hard to Learn, and Win

A little work never hurt anyone: Do unto others as you would have them do unto you: We'll cross that bridge when we come to it: all three sayings related to the freshman and sophomore soccer teams.

Through long afternoons of practice, the two teams learned that a little work never hurt anyone, and in this case the work was very beneficial. Joint practices were held Monday through Saturday, except game days, for about two and one-half hours. At the practices, West's youngest soccer players would "run, run, and run more," according to freshman Heath Spratlin. "We ran more than cross-country."

Sophomore coach Tim Wetmore and Freshmen coach Carl Fulkerson also stressed shooting, trapping, and communication. Practice may not have made perfect, but it made good enough for both teams to enjoy successful seasons.

Regarding both teammates and opponents, the freshmen and sophomore players were taught to do unto others as you would have them do unto you. Jeremy Lambert,freshman, said that Coach Wetmore wanted his players to "keep their cool when other people were out of hand."

A close bond between team members also formed. "We had a positive attitude and always took care of each other," said Jeremy.

Heath reinforced this statement by saying, "We really worked well together."

In terms of the future, the players decided that they would cross that bridge when they came to it. Most expected to continue playing at West next year. "Playing in high school could be a good way to get to play in college, too," said Heath.

Other players had no definite goals, but were undoubtedly sticking with soccer. "I'm going to play until I don't have legs," revealed Jeremy. - Greg Belshe

Up, Down, and All-around

Tumbling over and over in mid-air: sounds like a bad dream, huh? Well, gymnasts do it everyday. Gymnastics in '88 combined both skill and depth.

Coach Janine Sisk entertained hopes of capturing the state title. "If we stay healthy, we've got the strength and endurance to take it," Sisk said, raising an extremely important facet of the sport, injuries. "YKou never know about gymnastics," Sisk continued. One example from the West team illustrating the comment was senior Danielle Smith.

Smith competed in gymnastics for nine years, from the third grade, but her senior year was her last because of a nagging back injury.

"It turned into a question of whether or not I wanted to keep the constant pain as a sacrifice for college competition. The doctor said, 'Do you want to walk when you're thirty?' I decided I did, so that was that." Smith consistently took first, second, or third place in her two best events, the floor-exercise and vault. She also consistently won the all-around competition, the combination of scores from all events.

Another example of injury-ridden success came from junior gymnast Julie Finney. Finney always placed very well in two events, balance beam and uneven bars, but because of a foot injury could not compete in the other two of the sanctioned gymnastics events.

West displayed depth in their team, especially from senior Tiffany Morley and junior Amy Licius setting a new school record of over 104 points in one meet.

Contributions to the team depth came from a tight team spirit.

"We're all close," Smith expanded, "much more than last year."

Vikes Net Successful Season

At the mention of volleyball, thoughts slide to Frankie Avalon and Annette Funicello on the sands of Malibu Beach. At West, however, the friendly game of summer changed into an intense contest. Women's volleyball had a definite home in interscholastic competition, and its players lived up to the image of intensity. Practicing two hours every night, the Varsity Volleyball squad worked hard to forge a successful team. Nikki Fry, senior and co-captain of the squad, explained, "We've got a good team this year, but we've got to work hard. The year will fall through if we don't."

The season didn't fall through for the Lady Vikings. Late in the going they possessed a 28-2 record, dominating almost every team they played.

The sparkplug for playing hard came from Varsity coach Prudy Boan.

"She's tough," warned senior Debbie Roark, "but her nature always gets us going in practices or when we're down in games."

Returning letter-winners Fry, senior co-captain Megan Brown, Debbie Roark, and juniors Deanna Knorr and Shelley Lampe formed the nucleus of the team in games and practice.

"We knew what it was like to play Varsity," Fry said, "and the work necessary to put into it. We had to set a tone for tough practices at the beginning of the year."

As they prepared for the Blue Valley Quad, the final tournament of the season before the league matchups, the Vikes were extremely optimistic about their chances for state.

"We could take it all if we just stick together and work," Fry said.

"We will definitely have an excellent Varsity team next year," second year Junior Varsity volleyball coach Dana Meyers said. "The girls this year are a very talented group and we're training them for next year's Varsity team."

Head Coach Prudy Boan worked with Dana Meyers and Sophomore volleyball coach Jennifer Gill throughout the season. "They are my right and left hands," coach Boan said. "We all work together in coaching the teams."

This year the Junior Varsity team consisted of ten girls, headed by Captains Kerry Callicott, Amy Krings, and Barb Shideler. "Kerry Callicott is our second year JV captain," Coach Meyers added. "She is our team adhesive and is just outstanding." The team boasted a record of 11-5 near the end of the season, but as coach Meyers added, "Many of our games were very close, and we lost only by a few points. The girls this year are very free-spirited. They've been doing well in the tournaments."

The Lady Vikings dedicated much time and effort to the sport, as they held practices every day after school from 3 to 5. During practices the girls first stretched, then ran sprints, and finally drilled on the important bumps, sets, spikes, and serves unique only to the game of volleyball. Junior Kerry Callicott commented on the team, "We have a lot of individual talent. We expected to work better as a team, but we did well overall."

The Sophomore volleyball squad also strove to produce a competitive season. The team included thirteen girls and practiced together with the Junior Varsity team. Strength to Speed

As the climate of Kansas City changed during the month of November, so did the sports students played at Shawnee Mission West. While the temperature cooled outside, the Boys Varsity Basketball Team heated up as they undertook another tough and challenging schedule. "There's no doubt," commented senior starter Mark Powell, "we've got a very tough schedule, but the tougher the schedule, the better our team becomes."

This year's team proved to be different in many aspects. Gone were such catalysts as Doug Elstun and Troy Kerr. Both players were quite instrumental in last year's team reaching the state finals, but this year's Vikings refused to let the loss of such athletes hamper their performance this season.

What the team lacked in height, it made up in speed and leadership. Joined by seniors Eric "Sandman" Sandifer and Mark Powell, returning letterman Mike Russell constituted the nucleus of the team. "Many 'experts' have claimed this year as a rebuilding year for West," explained fifth year head coach John McFall. "This simply isn't true. Sure, we're a young team mostly comprised of juniors, but to call it a rebuilding year isn't correct.

New to the game this year across the nation at the high school level, the three-point line provided a different and challenging look for the game. "It'll make coaches and players change their game strategies, especially late in the game." McFall continued, "Plus it will have a definite effect in the real close games."

Tough Competition

Determination, willingness and ability to improve individual skills, team work, and good habits represented the qualities needed to obtain a position on West basketball teams. Coaches Harold Wambsgans and Gary Scott selected members for their teams after a grueling week-long trial.

The main goal given to JV was to provide excellent practice competition for Varsity. During practices, players concentrated on offensive and defensive plays in order to prepare for upcoming games. The JV squad's outstanding talents lay in the areas of speed and fast breaking.

Competition for a chance to play Varsity, however, caused team members to play at their full potential. According to Kevin Trame, junior, "This year will be a stepping stone for the '88-89 Varsity team. Next year Varsity players will have more experience." He continued by bringing the making of a good team into focus, "Competition drove us apart at first, but as the weeks progressed, we began to realize the importance of team work."

The sophomore squad had a willingness to learn, which represented their main strong point. They practiced every day after school for about two and one half hours, concentrating on fundamental skills, offense, and defense. "We hope to teach skills to help the players in their upcoming years and give them experience for Varsity," Coach Gary Scott provided with a smile. "We also hope to improve their attitudes, not just for basketball, but also for life itself." -Stacy Madsen

Steamroller!

West's football season ended in November, marking the end of most fall sports. It was virtually no time, however, before the winter sports started. Probably the most physical of the winter sports (or any, for that matter) was wrestling.

Preparation for the season involved training every day. The wrestlers lifted weights and performed push-ups and the infamous "staircase," an exercise which managed to move the entire mass Grapplers, as they were known, up and down a winding staircase repeatedly. The Grapplers never seemed to be finished; this high-intensity training went on for weeks. At the end of all this the Grapplers walked out of practice sweating and panting, with the realization that they must return to do it all again the next day.

Wrestling is very different from most team sports. The participants compete one-on-one with the representatives from other teams, yet it is still considered very much a team sport. The Grapplers spent most of the time in practice wrestling each other and showing each other new moves, or better ways of executing old ones. Whereas most people consider "rasslin'" to be an unstructured, haphazard sport with the wrestlers just fighting it out, wrestling is actually made up of a list of rules outlining what can't be done.

"Mr. Leonard is a great coach. He really knows how to get the most from athletes," stated Lorin Affield, a senior Grappler.

This year Coach Bill Leonard took the position of head coach, vacated by Coach Skakal when he left West. The team was a young one, with Lorin Affield and Mark Sheldon the only seniors. Juniors Jason Frahm and William Leonard helped to provide support as well. - Steve Young

Learning to Win

Pride and character: the Viking wrestlers' motto. This year's JV wrestling team, led by head coach Bill Leonard and coaches Don Alpaugh and Scott Dory, strove to improve their overall season record.

"Our JV this year is a fairly experienced team," Coach Leonard said. "Most of our JV team consists of freshmen and sophomores, but returning sophomores Joe Manis and Scott Weiss and freshman Andy Schwartzkopf are outstanding wrestlers."

Practice began on November 16 for all interested wrestlers. During the season, the JV team held practices every day after school from 3-5:30, as well as weight training every Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday mornings. "Coach Leonard expects a lot from us," Scott Weiss commented. "He really encourages and motivates us to do well."

Throughout the season, the JV team competed in ten events, along with four JV meets, the last being the JV League Tournament held in late February. "I would really like the JV team to finish in the top four this season," Coach Leonard said at the beginning of the season. "Our main goal is to show improvement."

Each week the coaches picked a different "Wrestler of the Week" to spotlight.

In addition to the JV and Varsity wrestling teams, coach Dory concentrated on the freshman and sophomore wrestling team, which competed in five to six meets.

"Wrestling is a challenge," Scott Weiss said. "It also gives me a chance to compete and to see how well I can do." Coach Leonard added, "I think the attitude of our wrestlers has improved. Even though we might have less ability, our attitude is better, and it's this good attitude that will really carry us through the season." - Frances Ting

Unity to Victory

"I try to teach the girls to compete in life, not only in sports, and to work as hard as they can. Winning isn't everything."

Coach Bill Frick established a remarkable relationship with his team. He took a special interest in their individual lives, wanting to know about their other involvements and accomplishments. "He's a great coach. He gives us confidence and wants us to get better. He's the kind of coach who's willing to help us. He shows what we're doing wrong and how to improve. Everyone likes him," junior Pam Allen said.

Ron Murphin, JV coach, also helped with Varsity. "If we ask him a question, he takes the time to answer," said Allen, appreciating the help of both coaches.

Accenting such points as depth, speed, and individual summer training, varsity girls hoped to improve last year's record by winning more then nine of their games.

"We have eight strong players, and we treat each other as equals. This year, we got off to a really great start: I really believe we'll be able to play in the State Tournament," Pam Allen stated.

Although they were the shortest team, they possessed tremendous speed and the ability for fast breaking. They hoped this would be their saving grace.

Varsity players constantly tried to improve their skills and team unity, which they considered the most important aspect in a good team. For the first few weeks, they practiced for two and a half hours on shooting, offense, and defense. Later in the year, they concentrated on the upcoming game. "I've been in the business longer than almost anybody. I know what other coaches like to do, so I prepare the girls," Coach Frick explained. - Stacy Madsen

"Friends, fun and flexible hours." Although those girls selected to Shawnee Mission West's Junior Varsity and Sophomore girls' basketball teams didn't receive even a portion of the $3.35 per hour earned by most McDonald's employees, they did at least reap the benefits of the first two-thirds of the restaurant's recruiting motto. In addition to athletic competition, new friendships and good times gave the girls incentive to dedicate themselves to their respective teams.

"Another incentive for us to work harder was the coaches' option of moving players between teams," said junior Vanessa Pecile. This occurred most often between the Varsity and Junior Varsity teams and usually served to give those Varsity team members usually confined to the bench a chance to compete for extended periods of time on the Junior Varsity level.

From the beginning, the girls basketball teams faced an important obstacle: a noticeable lack of height, in comparison to other teams. However, the teams were stocked with much quicker players than in years past.

The deciding factor in the success of the Lady Vikings in 1988 was exemplified in the theory "the best defense is a good defense." In other words, S.M. West's outstanding speed would have to create a more aggressive defense in order for the girls basketball teams to win.

Coaching duties were split between Bill Frick, Ron Murfin, and Larry Shepherd.

As in most groups and teams at West, a combination of a common interest and mutual friendships made the Lady Vikings basketball program successful. Junior Vanessa Pecile said, "I love basketball but I really think that the team itself is extremely fun; we're all good friends." -Adam Walker

Swinging For State

With gloves dusted and athletic shoes purchased, many hopeful girls appeared at the end of February for softball tryouts. Many had played the game for several years and hoped to use experience to their advantage in tryouts. They showed their hitting and fielding ability at its full potential, trying to make Coach Ron Merfen, also a teacher at Pawnee Elementary School, notice them.

During the tryouts, he looked for such qualities as athletic ability, enthusiasm, hard work, good attitudes as a student, and pride in their school. Those girls who tried out for Varsity had to display extra ability to show they could handle the competition of other teams. Merfen stated that his team was "young and inexperienced." He looked to returning Varsity player Becky Taylor to carry the team to victory. He also relied on senior Debbie Roark to successfully take the place of last year's star pitcher Trina Callicott.

Coach Merfen wanted to make a return trip to State, hoping to win this time. After spending two days with the Varsity hopefuls at tryouts, Coach Merfen chose those girls who proved to him that they had what it took to have the title of a Varsity softball player. Practices immediately started every day after school.

During practice he gave them game situations to prepare for all possible plays. The girls needed to be in good shape since Merfen only wanted "well-trained athletes" on his team. A good defense constituted West's strong point. They worked on keeping the other team from scoring by catching endless practice balls hit to each part of the field by Ron Merfen.

Proving Ground

"Yeah, I play softball." The proud words of junior Barbara Micek filled the room. But she could afford this exuberance, as could some thirty other girls, after being selected as a member of the Junior Varsity softball team. Many of the other girls played on the sophomore team, while a select group played on the Varsity level.

The Junior Varsity team, in addition to providing healthy competition, was seen as a proving ground by many girls. On a rare occasion, a girl can make the Varsity team in her first year. More often than not, however, individuals must toil more than one year on one of the less prestigious teams, constantly refining their skills and polishing mechanics, all in hopes of impressing Coach Ron Merfen to the extent that one day they would play on West's number one softball team.

A combination of a fiery coaching staff, the girls' desires to "prove themselves", and sheer enjoyment of playing the game well provided the quality control necessary to garner the Vikings a successful season. The season had a schedule similar to that of softball's brother sport, baseball. Tryouts were held the first week of March and the season ran through the end of May, encompassing Sunflower League competition and Regional and hopefully State tournaments for the Varsity.

Perenially, West softball is known to have exceptionally strong pitching and defense and an occasionally anemic offense. In the past the defense had been strong enough to carry the team through the season, but a revived offense enabled the Lady Vikings to be a dominant team.

Prior to the start of the season, West softball had the three winning ingredients: ability, organization, and drive. Only time would tell if these three factors could gel at the appropriate time to produce a winning team. - Adam Walker

A Field Day

It's a cold, damp day. You're standing at your locker trying to decide what homework needs finishing. You hear a thunderous rumble which seems to increase in volume with each passing second. You peer around the corner and are engulfed in a sea of black and gold. This cadence is not a swarm of bumblebees, it's the West track team.

In February, many West students could be found in area athletic stores buying track shoes and workout clothes. These purchases supplemented the sweats, shorts, and a shirt provided by the school to each member of the track team.

The runners then began to invade the streets of Overland Park, the track, and halls in hopes of creating a well-trained and successful team. During practices, led by coaches Clark Hay, Carl Owczarzack, Janine Sisk, and Bill Leonard, the team spent time running and lifting weights. The coaches looked for Melissa Schwartz, Shelley Collins, Kristen Wiens, and the three McClain brothers to set the pace for the season.

Practices quickly progressed into a winning season. However, according to junior Kristen Wiens, "It's different without the Wickstroms and the other seniors who graduated. There seems to be a gap in the team. We're more or less the leaders now." She continued by summing up the strengths of the team: "We all work together and help one another succeed. We give encouragement to those falling behind and push them to their limit. We want everyone to reach their individual and team goals."

Several qualities must exist in an athlete, as stated by Kristen Wiens: "They should be level-headed and have a high self-esteem." Wiens said the advice she would give to a runner is to "just to do as well as you can. Never think that you can do any less than your best." - Stacy Madsen

Coming Up Aces

For most West students, February 29 was marked only by wonderment and confusion over this extra day tacked on to the usually shorter month. Even though Leap Day had arrived once again, many Vikings were forced to forgo any celebration because another school night had also arrived.

A select group of dedicated sportsmen, however, found reason for mad partying: the lengthy tryout process began, providing new opportunity for boys' tennis hopefuls. A crowd literally gathered, not to watch the tryouts, but to actually fight for a spot on the squad. Forty-five young tennis warriors braved the clay battle ground, fighting for thirty team positions.

The selection process continued for two weeks. When the smoke cleared, those who made the team were divided into Varsity and Junior Varsity groups. Only six players earned the distinction of being Varsity players. For three of these Vikings, all juniors, this meant a second year on Varsity. Cuong Nguyen, Aaron McKee, and Tim Muir had all been a part of the Varsity squad which took third in state last year. Half of the Varsity team was not only experienced in the Varsity circuit, but also comfortable playing together.

Practice for the new tennis team continued after tryouts ended every day after school on the West courts. Meets began a few short weeks later. The Vikings played two to three meets a week, sometimes against only one other school, sometimes in tournaments. The truly intense and potentially prestigious competition began with the District Tournaments in the middle of the season. The League playoffs followed soon after. The season's climax came at the Regional and State Tournaments, with the Vikings striving to surpass last year's mark of third in state. - Greg Belshe

"Keep learning to play, maintain your composure no matter what, and maintain your fight - learn to stay in there and really fight."

Paul Loving, tennis coach, taught his team to play as well as they could - no matter if they won, lost, or tied. He said, "The trouble in skilled sports is that just working harder won't do it, you've got to work harder with a lot of skill."

Coach Loving helped improve the level of the girls' ability by practicing their consistency, serve, and strokes for two hours every day. Suzanne Sim,a returning letterman who took third at state competition last year, commented, "You can always improve by conditioning and running more - it's not all strokes. It has a lot to do with your mental attitude." Suzanne has been playing tennis for seven years, four years competitively. Her goal is to take State at least once before she graduates. "Whoever's playing the best will win State. I have a very good chance because all of the people I'll be competing against, I've beaten before," Sim said.

How did the girls psych themselves up for their numerous matches?

"I concentrate on the match, block out everything else, and just play as well as I can," freshman Stephanie Simsaid. She does not mind being the only freshman on the Varsity squad. She said, "They make me feel like I'm really a part of the team."

Senior Tracy Schmidt hoped that she and Stephanie Sim could make it to State in Number One Doubles.

"We have a strong squad but the level of competition anymore is so high that it doesn't always show as far as win/loss is concerned," said Schmidt.

As the winter months approached and the winter sports season began, so did West boys' swimming and diving. Beginning on November 16, the season resolved in late February with league and state.

This year's new swimming coach, Doug Brown, commented at the beginning of the season, "We are really excited about this season. This year we have a good bunch of juniors and seniors although we're lacking freshmen and sophomores for a base. But we have a team that can do a lot of things in success."

Returning lettermen included seniors Tim Beeler and Steve Herndon who placed ninth in state last year, along with juniors Mike Myers and Kevin Wait. "Coach Brown makes us work hard," Steve Herndon said. "He really motivates us."

The members of the team practiced every day after school for two and a half to three hours, as well as on Saturday mornings for three hours. Practices consisted of warm-ups, stretches, and weights.

The team competed in twelve meets thorughout the season. Each meet held races in the four swimming strokes: backstroke, freestyle, breaststroke, and butterfly, along with different relays such as the medley relays and the individual medleys, which combined all four strokes. The members of the diving team also competed individually in the various meets in one-meter diving.

"This year we're looking for individual success and individual improvement," Coach Brown commented. "Our guys are good and hard workers who have good work habits and who want to succeed. My definition of a success is improvement."

New Coach Arrives

When wrestling coach Jerry Skakal left West in 1987, the school lost two coaches for the price of one. His wife, Janet, had coached the Viking Girls swim/dive team in the past.

Administration finally settled their sights for a new "Swimmin' Women" coach on Tami Clark, a district substitute teacher from Great Bend, KS. She signed on to serve as the head coach of the entire group and also as the diving coach.

This pleased many of West's divers. Senior Ashley Wilson explained "Last year, Mrs. Skakal helped us a little, but we were mostly on our own. Now we have a diving coach that can teach us."

Whether the divers needed teaching was another matter. They brought back four state qualifiers from 1987, senior Ashley Wilson and juniors Katie Harl, Kerri Rollins, and Kristi Nickle.

Contrasting the experience of the divers, the swimming team abounded with freshmen and few upperclassmen, like seniors Tammi Wagner and Kim Cheney, and junior Komal Chopra.

Assistant coach Alynn Gray aided the young tankers with loads of conditioning. Practices began February 22 for meets that began in March.

Owing to the overall youth of the team and her first year, Coach Clark relied heavily on upperclassmen for leadership and help, especially Captains Wilson and Wagner.

As the season began, the West tankers had great hopes of qualifying many swimmers to the state meet at Lawrence on May 13 and 14. According to an unidentified diver, the use of the KU pool for the meet was a source of great excitement to the women because of "the big Jayhawk behind the diving boards." - Kent Davis

Covering The Bases

"Baseball in February? Right." Such was the reaction of many of the would-be Viking baseball players to the announcement that tryouts for the spring sport would begin deep in the heart of winter — February 29, to be exact. Despite the conditions, however, approximately 160 students showed up to try their luck at securing one of the 56 available positions, eighteen of which were Varsity positions.

Prospects for the Varsity squad were bright from the outset. Coach Harvey Shepard had the pleasure of seeing nine returning lettermen. It was particularly pleasing to note that they were returning from one of West's best baseball teams in many years.

Senior catcher and returning letterman John Vrooman said of Coach Shepard, "He is a dedicated coach- a real hard worker who knows baseball. He is also a very strict disciplinarian."

The team, however, was in dire need of discipline if they were to play out the long schedule at a championship level.

Sunflower League play began with a double-header, ended with a double-header, and had eight others sandwiched in between. These twenty games would determine the league champion.

In addition, regional and state tournaments followed league competition, with the winner of the Regionals advancing to State.

But in addition to the mechanical aspects of the sport, baseball was still just that to John Vrooman- a sport. "It's relaxing and I enjoy the spring weather. At the same time we love the competition." Vrooman said, "I think things look good for us. You can count on some competition from South, but it will be a good season." - Adam Walker

Developing Talent

In any sport, the future strength of a team can often be gauged by the strength of its developmental program. If there are many talented players on the Royals' minor league team in Omaha, Kansas City can look forward to a bright baseball future. In the same way, if the Junior Varsity and Sophomore baseball teams at West are brimming over with talent, the following year's Varsity team will almost certainly be tough. This relationship provided good reason to follow the progress of these less recognized baseball programs.

Tryouts were held for both the JV and Sophomore teams beginning on February 29. For two long weeks players were subjected to constant examination as the coaches watched every fly ball they caught (or dropped) and every curve they hit (or missed). Finally, on March 11, the new baseball teams were announced. Twenty-two students were put on the Junior Varsity team and twenty-one players made up the Sophomore squad.

The JV and Sophomore players took a daily bus ride after school to now-closed Broadmoor Junior High where they practiced. At the practices, JV coach Robert Morris, a social studies teacher at East, led his team in drills to improve on the baseball fundamentals of hitting and fielding. West teacher Gordon Wetmore coached the Sophomore squad.

JV played most of their games on Mondays and Fridays. The Sophomore team usually had games on Tuesday night and Saturday afternoon. Both teams played all games at the 3&2 baseball fields.

All contests were double headers, lasting for over three hours. Through the season, the players tried to get the maximum experience possible in hopes of winning a spot on Varsity next year. - Greg Belshe

Boys' Golf Club

In most team sports, if an individual scored one hundred points on his own, his teammates would praise him and probably carry him from the field in celebration. In golf, however, the goal is to achieve the lowest possible score. Instead of being carried off the field, a golfer who broke one hundred might be buried in a sand trap or thrown into a water hazard. The 1988 West Boys' Golf team strove to avoid both fates, high scoring and personal injury, during their long season.

The first day of activity for the golf team was on February 29 when tryouts began. Over thirty students ventured to the course in hopes of earning one of the twelve spots on the squad. After the new team was selected a few weeks later, practices began though the winter frost had not yet had time to melt.

Regular practices continued on a daily basis throughout the season. Returning coach Larry Seymour helped the golfers improve at these sessions. The golfers usually practiced at either St. Andrews Golf Course or the Tomahawk Golf Course until 5:00 or 5:30 in the afternoon.

Tournament play began on April 4. Competition continued as the squad attended a total of ten tournaments, averaging one Varsity meet a week.

The League Tournament for the Varsity players was held on May 12. Less than two weeks then passed before the Regional Tournament, which decided what teams would advance to State, was held. The Vikings competed at the State Tournament only two seasons ago, but most of the players who earned that honor have since graduated. No Longer Green

Seven Shawnee Mission West students participated in a weekly ritual of attempting to beat students from other area schools with clubs. These brutal Vikings were all girls, but still enjoyed the thrill of a hearty clubbing. Confused? Well, to clarify, the clubs mentioned were golf clubs and the not so sadistic girls were the West girls' golf team.

This season marked a year of improvement for the team on both a personal and group level. At many of the weekly tournaments, the Viking golfers placed respectably as a team. Julie Powell placed consistently among the top individual golfers throughout the season. Julie, one of three seniors of the team, earned a scholarship to play golf at Kansas State University. "I've improved a lot from last year," she said.

Such improvements did not occur without much hard work on the parts of the golfers. The girls' golf team practiced every day after school at the Overland Park Golf Course or the Tomahawk Golf Course throughout the months of September and October. For the ninth year, Howard Happ, math teacher and department chairman, served as the coach of the girls' golf team. Mr. Happ, himself an avid golfer, enjoyed helping students improve their golfing. "I like the game and love working with the kids," said Mr. Happ.

The "kids" also liked working with Mr. Happ and appreciated the advice and coaching that he provided. "He helped me. I'm much better then I was when I started," said senior golfer Mindy Clay.

The girls' golf team was again a tightly knit group due to the small size of the team. Seven girls represented West on the golf course. This would normally seem like a very small squad, but the previous season had produced a team of only five. - Greg Belshe

Boys Sprint to Excellence

"Cross Country is a team effort," junior and second year letterman Ladd McClain stated. "Running is an individual performance but we win as a team."

"We place individually," added third-year letterman, senior-David Jones,"but it all goes toward our team." This year the Boys Cross Country team, coached by newcomer Wayne Long and head coach Carl Owczarzak, boasted a squad of five returning lettermen: Rick Hugunin, sophomore, David Jones, Jimmy Gould and Mike Radcliffe, seniors, along with several new starters. "Everyone has been working hard and we hope to be a competitive team," Coach Owczarzak commented at the beginning of the season.

Practices and serious training began in late August. During the fall, the runners trained every day after school from 3:10 to 5:00. Each practice consisted of stretching, warm-up exercises, various distance runs, and intervals. But training didn't end there. As Ladd McClain stated, "I also practice two to three hours a day during week-ends."

The season commenced with the team's first meet at the Olathe South Invitational, and concluded six meets later. "Before each meet we run two to three miles about an hour before we are to compete-just to warm up," Jones stated. "We run only one race, 3.5 miles or 5k, but one race is enough! It can get pretty tiring!"

The team worked together for a successful season. They placed first at the Wyandotte Invitational and consistently placed in the top five in the early meets of their season.

They travel in snow, glide in the sleet, splosh through the rain, and overheat in the sun. They tackle endless hills and knee-high grass, but they tend to prefer around 65 degree weather with no wind for better breathing. Who accomplishes such feats as these? The girl's Cross Country team. Why do they run? "Good question," junior Kristen Wiens jokingly answered. "It's one thing I know I can do, and it gives me satisfaction."

Kristen Wiens, Misti Woodruff, and Kathy Schoeppner, seniors, all received letters again this year for their many excellent performances on Varsity. Carl Owczarzak, head coach for ten years, proudly named three outstanding newcomers who have largely contributed to the success of the team: Shelley Collins and Jodi Darst, juniors, and Cathy Jorden, senior. Greta Wiechman, junior , moved up to the varsity level during the season to further strengthen the team.

Practice makes perfect, and the girls had plenty of it. Every day from 3:10 to 5:00 they went through a routine of stretching, warm-ups, weights, and relays. According to Kristen Wiens, however, practice did not begin in the fall. "It takes about three months to get in shape for a long distance race. You need to work up your stamina and then work on your speed."

Each Tuesday, the dreaded intervals rolled around. At this time the girls warmed up by running one and a half miles. Then they ran different levels of sprints, 800 meter to 100 meter, at 85% of their actual speed. "This gets you in shape for passing, and keeping your pace throughout the entire course."

They had a total of seven meets during the season, which ended November 11 with the State Tournament. The girls raced in courses up to two miles in length.

SPIRIT FADING?

The picture of a high school sports event places the opposing teams tied with seconds left in regulation time, every eye in the crowd riveted on the playing field. More often than not, the picture didn't fit West in 1988.

Although crowd participation at football and boys basketball games occured, along with high attendance levels, most sports competed for self-satisfaction and little recognition. Senior wrestler Scott Condon complained. "I went to a basketball game on Tuesday night and had to search for a seat. At our Saturday meets the gym's not even half-filled." The wrestling team enjoyed a very successful season.

Some students worried that spirit as a whole fizzled in the past year. Senior fan James Davis observed that, "a lot of people don't come to games to watch them. They just come to talk."

Crowd response at pep asseemblies also fell. "It's much tougher to get the crowd into the assemblies," senior Pep Club Council member Amy Dlugas commented, "it seems like no one cares about how the teams are doing." The "rowdies," a fraternity of spirited pep-assembly goers from years past, appeared conspicuously absent from the gym, replaced by what veteran crowd man Todd Steinmetz called, "a watered-down version."

Maybe the era of crowd participation is over, but some still harbor hope. Doug Schwabauer, senior, expounded, "As long as there are sports, there will be fans." - Kent Davis

SUPREME DECISION

Following a bout of ill health and much consideration last summer, Justice Powell of the Supreme Court decided to step down. This started a series of events which were followed closely by most current events-minded Americans.

Powell had been a moderate, not siding with conservatives or liberals consistently. However, the rest of the court was made up of four Conservatives and four Liberals. This gave Powell's seat unusual importance in many cases, being the swing vote. One such case was Roe vs. Wade, in which the court decided that abortions would be legal in all fifty states, rather than letting each state decide on its own.

In the process of appointing a Supreme Court Justice, the President nominates his choice; then (hopefully) the Senate confirms that the nominee is competent. Reagan nominated Judge Robert Bork, a Conservative. This would have put the court in the Conservatives' favor by 5-4. The liberal members of the Senate Judiciary Committee vowed to block his appointment, even though no Justice had ever been turned down by the Senate due to ideology alone. Ted Kennedy and Joe Biden led the Liberal campaign and managed to get the Senate to vote against the appointment.

The next nominee, Douglas Ginsburg, withdrew after only a few weeks, due to his experimentation with marijuana. The third nominee, Anthony Kennedy, was considered moderately Conservative, and was confirmed without much opposition.

STRONG AT 200

It's not every year that a country celebrates the bicentennial of its Constitution, but for the United States, 1987 was such a year.

In the summer of 1787, delegates from twelve of the thirteen states gathered in Philadelphia to draw up a document that would guide the country. Virginia's James Madison, known still today as the "father of the Constitution," was instrumental in authoring the Constitution; he also made allowances for Constitutional amendments so that the document could change with the times.

Two hundred years later, the United States is still adhering closely to the work of our forefathers. To celebrate the Constitution's longevity, 1987 was a year of remembrance and appreciation. Magazine articles, public ceremonies, and speech after speech were given on the Constituiton: its history, its durability, and its future.

Ironically, this celebration came at a time when many Americans questioned why some Iran-Contra affair, were encouraged to work above, or at least around the Constitution.

Regardless of Constitutional confrontations, however, it has proven to be a durable document that has repeatedly, over the course of 200 years, acted as the glue that has held the United States together.

COMEDY SPORTZ

Sports are as American as hot dogs and apple pie. All of America's "favorite pastimes" have been sports. And yet one of the most innate human functions is to laugh. It was only a matter of time before these two arguably opposite pastimes, comedy and sports, would be joined together, much as chocolate and peanut-butter were fused to give us Reese's pieces.

Comedy Sportz evolved into quite a weekend ritual for many in the Kansas City area. Located in the backroom of Torre's Pizzaria, Friday and Saturday nights heralded the Commencement of a hilarious new form of audience-participation entertainment. On one hand, it was a competition; two teams of five professional comedians squared off against each other, in a series of games, racking up points, tallied on a large chalk-board. On the other hand, it was comedy; the games consisted of everything from competitive chain-of-thought comedy to skits, utilizing the imaginative ideas of the audience. Some games had definite victors, while others required audience judges to determine the outcome.

To keep things moving, a referee was present. He called "waffling" if the humor petered-out, at which point the comedians on stage were given thirty seconds to get funny, or get off the stage. Other penalties called by the referee included the "moaner", when a joke was so lame that the audience moaned, and the "brown bag", which an offender was forced to wear if he/she said something suggestive or vulgar.

LACKING CHARISMA

Throughout the early portion of the race for the Democratic Presidential nomination, a persistent obstacle plagued the Democratic party: of all the candidates who entered the race prior to the first caucuses in Iowa, none stood out as being strong enough to defeat whoever the Republican nominee might be. This was not necessarily due to a feeling of overwhelming national satisfaction with the Reagan administration, but more derived from the idea that the Democratic field, in general, lacked either charisma, media presence, charisma, morals, or charisma.

Gary Hart had been the front runner until it was exposed that he had been extramaritally involved. Hart dropped out of the race but later returned.

Missouri Congressman Richard Gephardt appeared to be the rural favorite when he won the Iowa caucuses. Paul Simon, senator from Illinois, was a close second. A well-respected politician, Simon was criticized for lacking mass appeal. Michael Dukakis was another strong candidate and the early front-runner from Massachusetts. Other candidates included former Arizona Governor Bruce Babbit, Albert Gore from Tennessee, and the Reverend Jesse Jackson. Many Democrats hoped for a strong leader to enter the race such as Mario Cuomo, Governor of New York, or Senator Bill Bradley from New Jersey. At the time the primaries and caucuses began, however, the Democrats were still searching for a candidate who could bring them the White House.

DEPTH OF FIELD

If Ronald Reagan was the Teflon President, George Bush could be aptly termed the Flypaper Candidate. While Reagan successfully evaded just about any form of extensive criticism, George Bush seemed to catch it all. Bush spent the first several months of his campaign fighting off a "wimp" label, charges of inactivity during his eight year tenure as Vice-President, and newscaster Dan Rather. These accusations took their toll on Bush; he finished behind front-runner Bob Dole and television evangelist Pat Robertson, in Iowa. Losing to a man with no political experience (Robertson) was particularly damaging to Bush, and it also proved the power of the media in the hands of someone who could use it.

Kansas Senator Bob Dole was probably the most experienced legislator of the group, having served previously as the Senate Majority Leader. Dole was also appealing to rural America; he grew up in poverty in Russell, Kansas. Bush's accomplishments, such as being a Navy war hero and FBI director, were overshadowed by the charges which hounded him through the early part of the campaign.

New York Congressman and former NFL standout Jack Kemp was in the lower half of the pack, along with Delaware Governor Pete DuPont, and former Reagan cabinet member Alexander Haig.

The Republican question was not of finding a candidate, but of choosing one before fighting among the "top dogs" weakened the entire party.

A VERY BLACK MONDAY

Monday, October 19, 1987, was nothing more than a typical school day for most West students. They relaxed at home that evening by watching TV or doing homework; many West parents spent the evening with dropped jaws, teary eyes, or upset stomachs. Because on this day, now known as Black Monday, the bottom fell out of the New York Stock Exchange, leaving the stock market in shambles and shareholders in shock.

Since its inception, the stock exchange has seen fortunes made and lost on a daily basis. On this day, the majority of investors were losers. $385 billion vanished in a flurry of trading. The Dow Jones industrial average plummeted 508 points, surpassing even the crash of Black Tuesday in 1929 which signaled the arrival of the Great Depression.

The immediate and obvious effect of the free fall was that millions of people across the country suddenly had less money. Economists expected retail sales, auto sales, housing, travel, and even college tuition to be hit hard by the monetary losses of these institutions and their customers. Foreign exchanges felt the shock of the U.S. collapse; markets in Japan and Great Britian also experienced sharp declines.

While some analysts puzzled at possible effects of the Crash, complacency in President Reagan's economic policies and computer-controlled bulk trading were most often cited as the sparks that ignited the plunge. Whatever the causes or effects, Black Monday reminded investors around the world of the volatility of the stock market.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH

In 1987, the U.S. Supreme court handed down a decision that could affect student publications nationwide for many years to come.

The case involved a school newspaper at Hazelwood East High School, in a suburb of St. Louis. Student journalists felt the need to address the issues of teenage pregnancy and the effect of divorce on teenagers. The articles were written and submitted to the publisher of the school newspaper. When the papers were distributed to the student body, however, the newspaper staff was shocked to find that those articles had been removed by the school's principal prior to publication.

When confronted with the situation, the pricipal declared that he was exercising his privilege of removing "inappropriate material" from the school curriculum. The students felt that their rights to freedom of speech had been infringed upon.

The students sued the school district and lost their case twice before the Supreme Court agreed to hear it in 1987. On December 13, the cases were presented in Washington, D.C. The Court upheld the decision handed down by the two lower courts, declaring that the students did not own the newspaper and therefore did not have the right to do with it as they pleased. The court did not judge the validity of the principal's decision. The future of student publications, it seems, rests in the flexibility of school administrators.

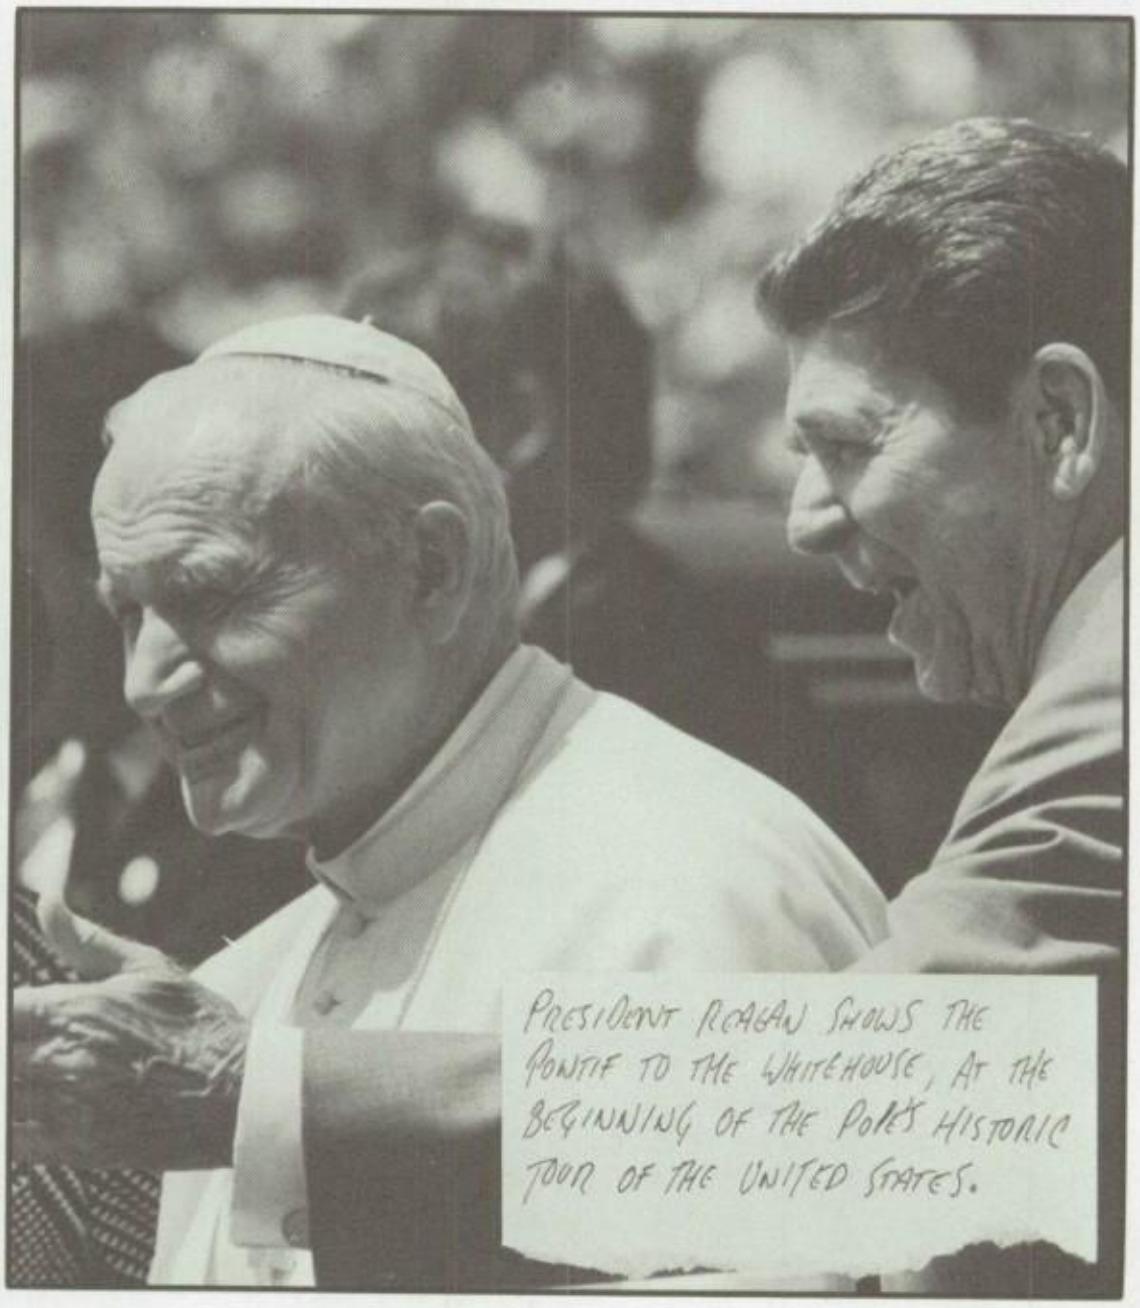
DAYTIME DRAMA

The summer of 1987 treated West students to daytime TV more socially pertinent than game shows or soap operas, however much we may have enjoyed them. Congress televised the contoversial, sometimes "chilling" Iran-Contra hearings. The hearings, held to understand the U.S. funneling of arms sale profits from Iran to the Nicaraguan insurgents, the Contras, heard testimony from everyone involved, from the glib, patriotic Oliver North, who was the actions man in the operation to former National Security Adviser John Poindexter, who took responsibility for the questionable legality of the project.

All of North's actions, taken without congressional knowledge, were staunchly defended by the Lieutenant Colonel with discourses on patriotism and geopolitics.

Poindexter's National Security predecessor, Robert McFarlane, expressed a belief that under the Boland Amendment's prohibition of U.S. aid to the Contras, providing assistance to them in military form or by soliciting funds was illegal.

Poindexter told the committee, "I made the decision and the President knew nothing about it." Indiana Democrat Lee Hamilton added, "I am impressed that policy was driven by a series of lies. Lies to the Iranians, lies to the CIA, lies to the Attorney General, lies to our friends and allies, lies to the Congress, and lies to the American people."



We'll Miss Them

1987 and early 1988 witnessed the passing of many notable personalities. Many of those who died were known to us through film and television. Dancer Fred Astaire, 88; the "Great One", Jackie Gleason, 71; one-time sex symbol Rita Hayworth, 68; actor/director John Huston, 81; Danny Kaye, 74; Lee Marvin, 63; Robert Preston, 68; Randolph Scott, 89; and little Heather Rourke, 12, of "Poltergeist" fame, all passed on.

Others who died were musicians who made an impact on the world. Andres Segovia, the Spanish guitarist died at 94. Reggae great Peter Tosh was gunned down in his home in Jamaica in an apparent robbery. Tosh was 42.

Also passing on were politicians and others in government. William Casey, 74, died of a brain tumor before getting a chance to testify in the Iran-Contra hearings. Chicago Mayor Harold Washington, 65, died of a heart attack. Kansas Republican and former presidential hopeful Alf Landon died a few weeks after his 100th birthday party, attended by President Reagan.

Other deaths included Arthur Burns, 83, Henry Ford II, 70, Bob Fosse, 60, artist Andy Warhol, 58, and Nobel physicist Richard Feynman, 69. Also passing on in 1987 was Rudolph Hess, 93, who was the sole prisoner of Spandau prison, in Germany. It is believed he was the last of the Central Nazi war-criminals.

Here To Stay

Health and Human Services Secretary Otis Bowen compared the disease to the black death. By mid-December of 1987, over 48,000 Americans had contracted it - an increase of 20,000 for one year. The disease, AIDS, portended to be around far past 1987 and 1988.

Incurable, AIDS killed over 20,000 in 1987. Popularly thought as a purely homosexual problem, the disease revealed itself as a heterosexual concern, as well. Spread through blood transfusions and unclean intravenous needles besides intimate contact, everyone had a cause to fear AIDS.

According to some, Ronald Reagan did not fear it enough. He continually asked for less funding to fight AIDS than Congress voted. He devoted his first speech dealing with the subject almost two years after the disease came to public notice. He appointed a presidential commission to research it, many of the members with dubious qualifications. After three months, the chairman, a doctor, resigned in frustration. Randy Shilts' book, "And The Band Played On" criticized government indifference as a major force in the spread of AIDS.

However, government programs did get off the ground locally: AIDS symposia to inform the Johnson County public were held in four of the Shawnee Mission High Schools.

PEACE AT LAST

While the nation agonized over the Iran-Contra scandal, Central American nations gathered in Guatemala City in August of 1987 to sign a peace plan sponsored by Costa Rican President Oscar Arias Sanchez.

Arias' plan put less pressure on the Nicaraquan Sandanista regime than U.S. proposals, but it did require a cease-fire in November, restoration of civil liberaties, and dialogue with opposition groups as soon as arms were laid down.

The White House criticized the plan as too wimpy, but even Jim Wright, Speaker of the House, who had co-sponsored a plan with the President, came out in support, calling the U.S. demands on Nicaragua "ridiculous."

In mid-December, Arias arrived in Stockholm, Sweden to receive the Nobel Prize for Peace for his efforts. However, Nicaraquan President Daniel Ortega had already announced plans for arms build-ups. Arias denounced the action as "a violation of the Guatemalan accord". The U.S. also approved a measure to send the insurgent Contras non-military aid.

Less than six months after its inception, the Arias plan stood on a shaky ground.

TWINS TOP CARDS

Known by their fans as Sweet Music, Kirby, Herbie, Wrench, Dr. Crank, Groove, Buck-ninety, Bruno, the Terminator, and the Panamanian Express, the 1987 Minnesota Twins sounded more like Disney characters than baseball players. All doubts about the Twins' athletic abilities were expelled, however, when they won the 1987 World Series Championship.

When the season began, few people outside of Minneapolis would have picked the Twins as the eventual World Series' victors. In fact, oddsmakers in Las Vegas stacked the odds 125 to 1 against a Minnesota championship.

The Twinkies, as the Twins soon became collectively called, made believers out of the baseball world, especially the St. Louis Cardinals, who fell to the Twins in the Series. The Cardinals were heavily favored going into game one, so the convincing victories of the Twinkies over the Cardinals in the two opening contests shocked observers. The wins came as no surprise to Minnesota fans, who had packed the Metrodome to wave their Homer Hankies all season as the Twins raced to the American League pennant.

When the Series travelled to Busch Stadium in St. Louis, the Twinkies' championship hopes got stale. They lost all three games. Clutch hitting and a home crowd helped propel the Twins to the necessary victories back in Minneapolis, though. When the final out of game seven was recorded, Minneapolis became suddenly filled with people making toasts with an odd combination: Twinkies and champagne.

OFF TO CALGARY

When the world's finest athletes in winter sports converged on Calgary, Alberta, the world watched, literally. An estimated 1.5 billion people tuned in across the globe to vicariously witness the 1988 Winter Games, which opened February 13. This figure is only one of the many indicators of the overwhelming growth that the Winter Olympics have experienced.

Executives at ABC may have wished that the Winter Games had not grown quite so much. The network had to pay a record $309 million to receive exclusive broadcasting rights for the competition. Determined to capitalize fully on their investment, ABC produced over 100 hours of Olympic coverage throughout the 16-day Games.

Most of this time was spent showing traditional events like figure skating, bobsledding, ice hockey, and ski jumping. Three new categories were added under the status of demonstration events: curling, freestyle skiing, and short track speed skating. To fill these trial events, the sizes of the squads had to be increased. Over 1700 athletes made the trek to Calgary, setting a new high in participation for the Winter Games. The United States sent the single largest delegation, 134 representatives.

The host city of Calgary provided a proper setting for growth and obsession with bigness. A Western town in every sense of the word, many compared it to a town that might be found in Texas, the American capital of large size.

THE SUPER BORE

Anyone predicting at 42-10 ut in Super Bowl XXII would most ely have been foreseeing a vic- ry by the heavy-handed of- nse of the Denver Broncos. ney would have foreseen the rrect score, but the wrong vic- r. In a stunning triumph for the nderdog, the Washington Reds- ns shocked the favored Broncos 2-10 on January 24th in San ego, California.

While most expected Super unday's hero to be Denver quar- rback John Elway, his Redskins ounterpart Doug Williams gar- ered the Most Valuable Player nors. Williams' team first ap- eared to be fulfilling the proph- cies of the press. Early in the ontest, the Redskins fell behind e Broncos 10-0. In fact, the oncos first offensive play was a 6-yard touchdown pass, apparently boding a Bronco victory.

During the second quarter, Williams led the Redskins back in a big way. By the time the whistle blew ending the first half, the Broncos had been victimized by an offensive flurry unmatched in Super Bowl history. The Redskins scored a postseason record 35 points while racking up 356 yards of one offense in the third quarter alone.

The traditional halftime extravaganza featured the Rockettes, but the show was already over for the Broncos. The Redskins continued to dominate through the second half, holding the Broncos scoring machine in check. When the final play was complete, the Redskins walked off the field with a 42-10 victory to relish as they waited for their Super Bowl rings to arrive.

S'NO SCHOOL

The most memorable winter days for West students were notable not for what happened on them, but instead of what did not. December 14th and 15th and February 11th brought three days of unscheduled vacation due to heavy snowfall.

The first two snow-days were side effects of the season's deepest blanketing, which began late Sunday night, December 13th. Students and teachers were greeted the following morning with news of the dismissal. Determined not to waste the early Christmas gift, the liberated teenagers swamped malls and movie theaters in search of recreation. Heartier sorts ventured to sled runs and frozen lakes at local parks.

Forecasts called for snow to diminish Monday night, but the damage had already been done, as school was cancelled for Tuesday. Total accumulation before the snow dissipated Tuesday morning, piled up at eight to ten inches in most areas. Students celebrated by digging out and heading out; street crews had already cleared major byways.

The February snow-day came as more of a surprise for Vikings. Though it snowed heavily for most of the previous day, the storm had abated by the early evening. The ten-o'clock news, however, brought word that schools would be closed. Some speculated that district officials feared frigid temperatures and bad conditions on side streets. Others thought they just wanted a day off.

Movies Reborn

A few years ago, when video recorders were just becoming popular, it was feared that the movie industry would suffer. Not only were these gloomy predictions wrong, but experts were pleasantly surprised to find that the movie industry had grown stronger.

This year has seen many smash hits at the box office. As the school year was beginning everyone "had" to see "Fatal Attraction", a thriller about a man whose one extra-marital affair turned chillingly tragic. It was a big year for Michael Douglas, first starring in "Fatal Attraction", then in the remarkably timely "Wall Street", a movie about inside trading. It was released about the time Ivan Boeske was sent up the river. Other hits included "Dirty Dancing", "Hope and Glory", "Good Morning Vietnam", and "Throw Mamma from the Train". Two of the biggest movies were adaptations of popular novels, "Empire of the Sun" and "Less Than Zero". This brings up the topic of books, of which there was a bumper crop of winners this year. In the area of fiction novels, Stephan King wrote "Misery" and "The Tommyknockers", both true to form. Other fiction bestsellers included Tom Wolfe's "Bonfire of the Vanities" and Scott Turow's "Presumed Innocent". Controversial was the key word for non-fiction, starting off with "The Closing of the American Mind", an expose on colleges by Arthur Bloom. Another best seller was "Spy Catcher", by Peter Wright, which was banned in England, due to its content of classified information about British Intelligence. Also popular were Autobiographies by Donald Trump and Bob and Elizabeth Dole.

Chopra Stays

Shawnee Mission District School's Superintendent Raj Chopra was faced with a serious dilemma in 1987. No, not whether to close schools due to inclement weather, but instead whether to accept the job of Superintendent of Schools in Columbus, Ohio.

Chopra, in his sixth year in Shawnee Mission, applied for the job in early fall, and eventually became one of three finalists for the position.

When he learned of this decision, he began to intensively study, along with his family, the pros and cons of the situation. For instance, Dr. Chopra saw the Columbus job as a challenge: That district encompassed a larger number of students, approximately twice as many as in Shawnee Mission. On the other hand, the Chopra family had reservations about leaving the area. The salaries in each district were approximately the same, so a pay difference was not a factor. After carefully weighing the situation, he decided to remain in Shawnee Mission.

Student opinion on Chopra's decision differed. Junior Scott Wilson said, "He's done so much for us, perhaps Columbus would have been good for him ... (sigh) but then again, he has to account for his family."

Dr. Chopra's daughter Komal, a junior at West, was glad that she would have the opportunity to finish her high school career at West.

US SENDS NAVY

The Middle East has been in turmoil for almost 2,000 years, and to attempt to explain all of the reasons would be a fruitless folly. However, an important part of the 1988 situation in that region was the eight-year old Iran-Iraq war. Each tried to suffocate the other by bombing the other's oil tankers; oil equals life in this region. The Persian Gulf, however, across which the two combatants fought, was international waters. The United States, as well as many other Western Countries, used the Gulf to transport oil from other countries, such as Kuwait. The problems heightened in the summer of 1987, when Iran announced that it would sink any ships it even suspected of aiding Iraq, a policy reminiscent of the German U-boat campaign before WWII.

This prompted the United States to send in the Navy, to protect our interests on the high seas.

Catastrophe struck when a Iraqi plane fired on the USS Stark, killing 37 seamen. After an investigation, the United States accepted the Iraqi claim that it was an accident. The U.S. then reflagged Kuwaiti tankers and escorted them through the Gulf. Shortly thereafter, mines showed up in the Gulf, later proven to have been laid by Iran. As time went on, tension grew and then lessened, the point of highest tension being when the U.S. destroyed an Iranian Oil platform used for gunboat refueling, in retaliation of an Iranian attack on U.S. ships in Kuwaiti waters. Tensions still ran high, but media attention shifted to somewhere else.

MAN OF THE YEAR

Picture a man with political savvy, media presence, and the reins of a country in his hands. Ronald Reagan? Guess again. In 1988, it was Mikhail Gorbachev, premier of the USSR.

The successor of the sickly Yori Andropov, Gorbachev replaced the image of a sickly, unpopular, unpleasant Soviet leader with a new, vibrant, open-minded appearance.

Gorbachev brought with him a new policy, called glasnost, or openness. The Soviet Union instigated capitalistic elements into their Communist system. Some proprieters owned their own stores and some producers made their own goods.

The changes resulted from Gorbachev's desire to turn the industially backward Soviet Union into a "real superpower," able to compete with other countries in the world marketplace.

Gorbachev's biggest effect came from his trip to the United States to negotiate the INF treaty. The American public felt favorably for Gorbachev and his wife, Raisa, at a time when President Reagan's popularity was waning. The Russian premier actually ended up on top of a popularity poll between the two.

Named TIME magazine's Man of The Year, Gorbachev brought a new face to Soviet politics, but many experts fear that behind the friendly facade hides a cold, calculating interior. Only time, or Raisa, could tell.

NO NUKES

For as long as the idea has been out in the open, SDI, or Strategic Defense Initiative, has been a monkey-wrench which has found itself tossed into the delicate gear-works of disarmament negotiations. However, in December this impasse was at least temporarily left behind; negotiators agreed to disagree. This led the way to the signing of a treaty that, if nothing else, was a token of good-will.

Labelled INF, the treaty sought to eliminate intermediate-range nuclear forces, through on-site verification in both the U.S. and Soviet Union, something never agreed to in past treaties. Although this only represented about 4 percent of each country's nuclear arsenal, proponents maintain that, as a gesture, it was a major break-through in international relations. Although the treaty was signed in the midst of a dual PR campaign that helped both Reagan and Gorbachev in the polls, serious doubts were raised as to whether or not it would be ratified by the Supreme Soviet, much less the U.S. Senate. Gorbachev at one point suggested that ratification on his side would be tougher than it was in 1980, when the Supreme Soviet rubber-stamped the SALT II treaty, only to have the U.S. Senate burst their bubble by not ratifying. And, largely due to the many questions raised about verification, human rights, Nicaragua and Afghanistan, the GOP threatened to attempt a block of the treaty with support of "Killer Ammendments".

"Good reading often leads to good writing," commented Sally Wunsch, one of many English teachers West prides itself in having. From reading modern American and British author's works to writing five paragraph themes, students kept busy in their English classes. Miles Sheffler, heading the English department, and his fellow co-workers, set out to make their English classes an environment where learning would prove a positive experience for students and teachers alike.

Retaining information in English class proved useful for any student that yearned to acquire knowlede of the French language. New to French classes and the faculty, Monsieur Marcel Bailly from Switzerland gave a different perspective to teaching and learning French. "I find that the classes are larger than ours in Switzerland," commented Bailly, "but we are constantly learning from each other." In exchange for Monsieur Bailly, West teacher Carol Black taught in Switzerland. Most students agreed that the exchange turned out quite worthwhile - Taylor McCammon

Culture study

"I love the Russian language," Russian instructor Trudy Ringer stated. "I really enjoy teaching it; I hope the students enjoy it also."

Throughout the year Mrs. Ringer taught her three Russian classes the basics of the language as well as culture study. "I hope my students go on with the language since there is a good future in it," Mrs. Ringer added.

This past year Senoras Gladys Abreu and Fabiola Herdoiza guided their students through intensive and careful pronunciation of the Spanish language. Students also looked forward to the several fiestas held throughout the year.

Herr Carl Owczarzak and Herr Ron Walker continued to teach students how to speak "Deutsch" through grammar study, discussion of German magazine articles and cultural films, along with several fests of German food.

Regent Program

How many people get a first-hand look at their future? Greg Belshe did this summer. The Kansas Regents' Honors Institute offered him a chance to experience college before he reached his junior year.

The Kansas Board of Regents offered one hundred-thirty students the chance to attend Fort Hays State University as registered college students from June 7 through July 3.

Two students, one boy and one girl, from each area high school were chosen through intense competition. The winners from West were Greg and junior Greta Wiechman, who could not attend because of scheduling conflicts.

Students attending the Institute studied two classes, philosophy and sociology, for full credit. In one month the students worked the full Freshman course load.

"I learned so much because the professors treated us like real college students," Belshe explained. "That was the best part." - Kent Davis

In preparation for the Institute, Greg underwent rigorous training, including computer work, overseen by Seek counselor Dr. Brian Angevine.

Personal Care

"I like to help people. I like to make people feel happy," senior Sherrie Strickland stated. "I have always wanted to be a nurse and by taking Health Careers I and II, I can gain experience and education in my future career."

Students enrolled in Health Careers I received a basic introduction to careers in Medical fields such as nursing, paramedics, and physical and occupational therapy, as well as learning basic procedures for taking blood pressure, pulse, and temperature. Students in Health Careers II then put this knowledge to use as they assisted professionals in on-the-job training. Students also took several field trips throughout the year to area hospitals.

Child Development teaches what it takes to become a successful parent, and also explores the needs and emotions of children by studying the various stages of development.

As senior Rachel Hammeradded, "If you really like and enjoy working with children, Child Development can be a very rewarding class." - Frances Ting

Numbers plus

Many teachers at West provided instruction in a language that remains foreign to students despite repeated classes. The language is not Spanish, French, or even English. This language is math.

West sophomores this year had a new class option, Math 10, offering more opportunity to improve their fluency in this universal language.

Math related classes included the teaching of math as applied to business or accounting. The accounting staff welcomed a new teacher, Deanna Schaaf, to their department. Mrs. Schaaf brought with her fifteen years of teaching experience in business education. At West the newcomer taught Accounting I and Accounting II classes in her first year.

Many students lose no love over their math courses, while others realize the value of this discipline. Cuong Nguyen,a junior honors math student, said, "Math can improve your problem solving skills. Math is essential to life." - Greg Belshe

History made

Just as American GI's invaded Normandy Beach for D-Day, juniors at West invaded the classrooms of the four men who taught .the American Studies course. Robert Buller, Warren Knutson, Al Brox, and Ron Walker all teamed up to battle the different subjects to choose from every nine weeks. "A unique quality to the course is that we try to make the subjects appealing to the students," Mr. Walker explained. "The ability to choose a new class and teacher every nine weeks keeps the students motivated. No other school offers this program. The four of us enjoy the change as much as the students do. That's why it's still alive at West."

Other students studied the growth of our nation in American History. "Remembering dates isn't history. Understanding what occurs is," remarked A.O. McDonald, the Honors History teacher. Writing the dreaded twenty-page theme highlighted the year. Mr. McDonald stated, "It's remarkable what students discover in their papers about history." -Taylor McCammon

Enthralled by their teacher's lecture, juniors John Ballou, Beth Lenehan, and Todd Vandeberghe share a look of complete amusement.

ASDF JKL;

If one industry is definitely going to make it big in the future, what would it be? Cajun-fast-food? No, that's a fad. The answer is the computer industry.

A working knowledge of computers is essential for the job market of the future. That's why the class of 1989 was the first to be required to have taken Intro to Computers. The course covered the basics of how a computer works and how to program. "It was a pretty good course. It got me interested in computers," commented senior John King.

Other courses available included Basic I, Basic II, Pascal, and Independent Studies. The students who took these courses have an advantage over the computer-illiterate of all ages.

Some students prepared for computer courses by learning to type. When students learned the "ASDF-JKL;" method, typing became much easier than it was when hunt-and-peck was the rule. Students in both classes definitely weren't hunting for the future. They found it. - Steve Young Psyche!

Have you ever wondered what ideas lurk behind the closed doors of one's mind? The Psychology and Sociology classes, offered to West juniors and seniors, concentrated on the science of human behavior.

The class covered several topics, including memory, learning, perception, personalities, intelligence, and abnormal and social psychology. Junior Mindy Bast commented, "I like Psychology because it's interesting to learn about how the human mind works and how people react to different situations. It does not just deal with people who are mentally ill, there are many different aspects."

Mr. Pennington wanted to make students aware of the behavior of all types of people. His sociology class covered such topics as theory, comparative culture, and social problems.

New gymsuits?

As students frantically ran to the next class, those in Physical Education, now called Lifetime Sports, leisurely strolled to the locker room with five minutes remaining before roll call. Blue gymsuits for girls, white shirt and shorts for boys, or gold shirt and black shorts for both replaced the many diverse outfits of previous years.

In order to determine the physical capabilities of teenagers a "pre" and "post" test appeared as a solution. Given to freshmen, the tests measured strength, flexibility, and stamina. Freshman Stephanie Sim commented, "I like the class but some of those tests were hard." The freshmen gym class had four parts: individual and team sports, aquatics, and fitness.

Health, taught by Prudy Boan, covered such topics as the human body and its function. The class placed an emphasis on individual fitness. - Stacy Madsen

Driving Right

Taking the first drive in the family car represents a milestone in the life of any student. However, it takes several hours of proper training to reach that valued moment. To receive that training, many students at West enroll in a driver's education class.

Soon after settling into the class, students memorized the valuable "Fourteen Steps to starting a car" and took the State's Driver's Handbook Test to achieve a learner's permit. That permit allowed the student to drive more than six hours on the road during class time with their instructor. "Gaining the experience needed to drive successfully is very important," commented Gary Scott, one of the teachers in the class. "The more the experience the better a driver you can become."

When not on the road, students spent time in the classroom, learning the "how's and why's" of driving, or they "drove" in simulation, a mock car that allowed for making and correcting mistakes in driving technique. Mr. Scott continued, "We want our students to feel comfortable at the wheel." -Taylor McCammon

Backstage

Creating the most effective setting for a theater production challenges any director. Learning the proper techniques to create striking scenery and persuasive props for a production helps to conquer that challenge. Evolving from an advanced drama class, Seth McClintock's seventh hour Repertory Theater/Stage Craft class trained its students in the many aspects of a good production.

Placing heavy emphasis on the often overlooked technical side of a play, the eleven class members studied all levels of scene design, from lighting arrangements to costuming and makeup. "Learning the different sides of a production helps me appreciate what is done when a show goes on," stated Angela Williams.

Not only does the class study the important technical characteristics of a show, but the class focuses on acting as well. Creating characters and their developments are stressed. Weekly, each class member memorized lines and later presented their interpretations of that character to the class. Williams continued, "Everybody's talent is developed." - Taylor McCammon

Theoretically

The words rudiment, cadence, and progressions, in a musical context, mean precious little to most people. A handful of students, however, have a firm grip on the meaning of these words, in addition to countless others.

A large portion of these students were enrolled in William Oldham's Music Theory course. Music Theory, as taught at West, is an extensive introduction to mechanics of music and the writing ot it.

The first semester of the year-long course is devoted to studying harmonies and tonal relationships, while in the second, piano/voice composition is a focus.

Music Theory is an included asset to those students who aspire to a musical career or use musical talents as scholarship magnets. Junior Sean Gibbs commented, "The college of my choice will be completely music-oriented. Since my forte isn't academic, I'll need every extra edge to pad my application." (And then there is the obvious benefit of the carry-over of sharpened technique in music performance.) - Adam Walker

After a difficult hour of learning harmonial intonation, the Music Theory class gathers round Johnson for a rousing sing-along.

Articulate!

For years the S.M West Forensics and Drama departments have been among the best in the area, and each involves many students. Key classes for the respective departments are Forensics and Repertory Theatre. Equally vital to each are the Drama and Speech I and II classes, which act as prerequisites.

In Speech I, taught by Robert Lane, the subject matter consisted of learning proper techniques for writing and giving speeches. Classes were given a general topic from which they were given the task of extracting a suitable speech. In Speech II, which is more or less identical to Forensics, students located, studied, cut, rehearsed, and performed either individual or duet scripts at least three times each semester.

Drama, taught by Seth McClintock, impressed upon students the mechanics, such as facial and bodily expressions, vocal quality, and stage movement. Janna Ziegler commented, "It teaches the acting process, which is more difficult than most people realize." - Adam Walker

The popular Forensics "Hitchhiker game" encouraged students to take on different characters and reveal hidden talents.

"What to do? My shirt has been torn!"

"Take it to Mrs. Bigler. She can mend anything."

Well, maybe not everything, but enough to qualify her as a clothing teacher.

Clothing courses at West offered students the opportunity to learn a craft that they could probably use every day for the remainder of their lives. Even if the art of creating, altering, and mending is applied only sporadically, knowing one's clothing skills is an invaluable asset.

The same can be said of the Foods I and II classes offered at West. These were also taught by Mrs. Bigler and Marilyn Gold.

In Foods, as in Clothing, students learned the basic survival skills necessary. One particular popular aspect of the Food class is that students sample their creations (although occasionally, this may not have been a benefit at all).

In any case, these two facets of West's Home Economics curriculum taught students needed skills. -Adam Walker

Creativity

When many students think about visual art, they conjure up images of what to them looks like deformed blobs of paint that represent the artist's "expression of individuality", or something like that. Actually, a lot of art produced by the Art and Design classes appeals to West students, as evidenced by the favorable reaction most students had of the work displayed on the bridge at the end of the year.

One aspect of visual art that appealed to west students was photography, because anyone can excell at photography, if they have an "eye for Art". Students in photography classes, taught by Dan Dakotas, learned the basics of taking and developing pictures, and experimented with various picture-taking techniques.

Other art classes dealt with 3-dimmensional art, like ceramics and jewelry making. Many of the works that came out of these classes were functional as well as aesthetic. Chris Bangs commented, "Art class is fun because it's fun to create things." -Steve Young

Quality work

Anything complex needs to be planned before work on it begins. That's why students in Drafting, taught by Tom Brown, must learn how to draw a 3-dimensional object on a two-dimensional sheet of paper.

Then, in Advanced Drafting, taught by Leon Smith, students concentrated on architectural designs. They spent months building model homes from plans they had drawn up themselves. Some stuck to conservative designs, but others went for the extravagant and built dream homes. All of these homes were difficult to build. Students were faced with un-predicted problems and an occasional design error. When done, the model homes were all entered in the R&D Forum and other regional competitions.

Wood Shop offered students a chance to apply their design-skills in a functional mannner. Students spent as much as $300 in materials for building desks, cabinets, waterbeds and other home furnishings. Many of these projects were also entered in R&D Forum at the end of the year. -Steve Young

Preparing

Becoming involved in high school activities can be difficult, at best, when competing with over 2000 other students. Two new classes, Introduction to Yearbooking and Drill/Flag Fundementals, were added at West two years ago to help potential Solid Gold Dancers and Time-Life Book writers explore their areas of interest while underclassmen.

Both classes enjoyed their second successful year of providing freshmen and sophomores with opportunities to become more involved at West.

The yearbooking class sported a revamped curriculum designed to place greater emphasis on student production. Judy McMahan once again taught the basics of yearbook making, including layout, photography, picture captioning and cropping, salesmanship, and copy writing.

The drillteam class, instructed by Linda Case, gave "a definite advantage of knowing the basics" to its students, according to Case. -Greg Belshe

Tutelage

"Help! I'm failing six classes!" Not to worry, your needs can be met ... by a tutor! In the past year, at any hour of the school day, tutors were available to assist needy West students.

Our six-"F" friend probably could not have been saved by tutelage, as he would have encountered the same problem as many who tried to find an in-school tutor to help them: the tutors might have known nothing about the student's troublesome subject. If, however, this was not a conflict, the tutor system was extremely beneficial to many students. "If someone is hurting, the tutor can usually help," said Bob Harris, math teacher and tutor.

Again this year, freshmen were required to take an Advisory Period, which was used to facilitate teaching study skills, tutoring, or individual studying. Tucker Trotter said of his advisory, "I think it is worthwhile because it can be used for many things, such as studying or catching up on sleep." - Adam Walker

Keeping the Campus Clean

All over the West campus, students found the slogan "Vikings Pitch In" boldly written in bold black and gold letters. With the addition of two pop vending machines at the end of the bridge, the responsibility to dispose of empty cans properly was a major barrier to West's cleanliness.

The idea of "Pitching In" developed over the summer in hopes of curbing the cleanliness problem. To promote the theme, Varsity cheerleaders introduced this idea to freshmen at orientation and Principal John Krueger heavily stressed the idea over morning announcements during the first week of school. All in all, the Pitch In campaign succeeded at its objective of keeping West clean.

A Place To Hang Your Pencils

In a society where everyone has a different way of doing things, from making a peanut-butter sandwich to getting rid of the budget deficit, finding the perfect place for study is no different.

"There's nowhere I feel more comfortable than in my bedroom," senior Steve DeGarmo explained, "that's the only place in the world that is really mine." Apparently, the mixture of stereo, bed, and desk or bookcase took prizes as learning-enhancing environment.

Other students found the park a rewarding location, peace and quiet being so hard to find.

"Practice, practice, practice." These words of encouragement are often spoken to athletes by their coaches if they are to be successful. One opportunity given too West athletes to become more successful came from an open-gym, concentrating specifically on basketball.

Run by Marvin Paepke, the gymnasium was open every Tuesday and Thursday evening until the start of the basketball season. To many, the open-gym served as a time to prepare for the upcoming basketball season; time they may not have had anywhere else. "The gym was a great advantage," commented senior Mark Powell. During one of the most eagerly anticipated concerts in recent years, Irish rock band U2 performed "I Still Haven't Foung What I'm Looking For," bringing a roar from the young audience. Cheers and whistles should have been expected, however, because this song summarized the situation that so many seniors faced in searching for a college home.

For many of the nine months that comprised a senior's final stay in public education, much time was spent taking placemenmt tests, applying to schools, or sweating through any of the hundreds of tasks required to attend college.

With the revelation that the high school years were over, seniors also realized that those years were only preparation for the educational beginnings of college.

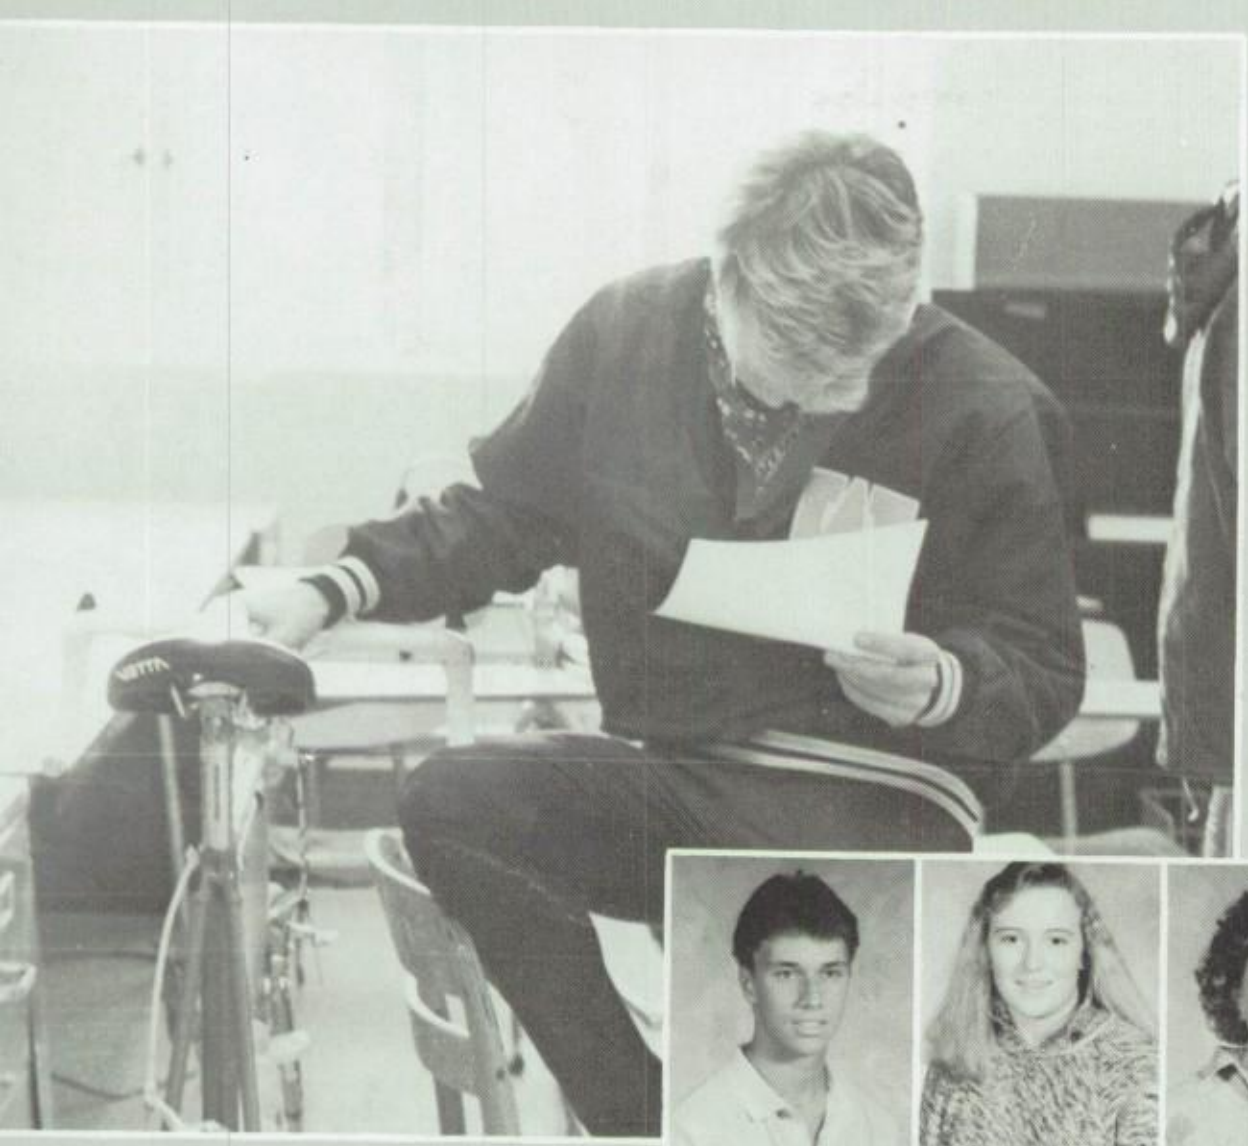
Breaking Away



Student initiative on the part of senior Eric Schmidt resulted in S.M. West's first Cycling Club.

The first meeting was held in early October. Rides through the surrounding area were scheduled for every two weeks. In addition, numerous guest speakers gave instruction in topics essential to good cycling.

Joan Kersnowski, an English teacher at West and an invaluable support to the club was surprised by the turnout. "About forty kids came to the first meeting and fifteen came to the first ride. There are a lot of really dedicated bikers at West, some of them ride up to 100 miles a week."

Obviously, there are many student activities not provided for at West. Cycliing Club gave organization on to one of these.

Across the Atlantic

Have you ever dreamed of studying for one year in a foreign country? For Marta Diaz-Arriaga, senior, this dream became a reality.

In the Canary Islands, where she lived, Marta studied English for six years, three hours each week, to prepare for America. On weekends, she and a group of her freinds would go to discos similar to Pogo's. They rarely had house parties.

During the year, she stayed with Mrs. Linda Case, Drill Team sponsor and English teacher at West. Marta enjoys riding horses and going to the beach. She loved the movie "La Bamba".

Although she missed her family and friends, Marta enjoyed the friendliness of Americans and watching her future brighten.

Plagued by a persistent back injury her sophomore and junior years, Danielle Smith's senior year proved to be more successful. In 1987, she showed that she had conquered her injury. Winning the all-around championship at the northeast regional, earning the Sunflower League title, and becoming a three-time member of the Kansas City Star's All-Metro Gymnastics team, this talented gymnast helped lead her team to the State 6A Gymnastics Championship at Shawnee Mission Northwest in mid-November.

"Our best meet was State," commented Danielle. "The past two years were really frustrating for the team, but this year we overcame and we won."

Recognized for Excellence

What began as a requirement for Ken Bingman's honors Biology classes transformed into a national NASA competition. After a great amount of brainstorming, juniorAmy Brianchose to research cultivation of pearls in space. In hopes of solving the problem of de-calcification for humans travelling in space, Amy proposed to send oysters, placed in special water, into space for one and a half years. She wanted to see if pearls would form. Amy took her project to Regionals in California. Then, she ventured to Washington D.C., where she presented her project and won nationally. A reception followed at the Aaron Space Museum where she met Kansas Senator Bob Dole. Amy won a set of encyclopedias and a $250 scholarship.

The bridge was a veritable bee-hive of activity throughout the year. Not only did students congetate there, but out-of-school organizations did as well. Take, for example, Armed Forces Recruiters.

Recruiters came to school several times during the year. They generally set up a table with pamphlets and information. Then a few representatives would stand behind the table, answering questions from curious students.

Some did a little more. In November, the army set up several demonstrations on the bridge, including a target shoot outside in the circle drive were two armored troop-transporters.

Many students learned about possible careers in the military through these representatives.

Monday Bloody Monday

As the season of giving fast approached West, students were asked to give their "red", instead of giving their "bread". On December 7th, the Community Blood Center's Blood Mobile set up shop in the Little Gym. Sponsored by Student Council, the Blood Mobile collected blood from both students and faculty alike. Earlier in the month, STUCO set a goal of collecting 135 pints. That goal fell short by two pints.

Anybody could give blood as long as they met the requirements of being seventeen years old and weighing 100 pounds. As senior type "A" donor Matt Hawkins commented, "I wanted to give blood because it was a good cause. Plus, Kristin Mueller asked me to and I like her."

Checkmate!

West's own chess club, in its second year after its inception, proved to be competitive. "This year we have a really good team," sponsor Ted Glenn said. "We have a group of enthusiastic and dedicated chess players and a lot of team spirit."

The chess club competed once a month against other area high schools in both Kansas and Missouri, as well as the Kansas City Area Championship held in April. Most of the students in chess club had been in it last year and claimed strong individual talent such as senior Hsiau-Te Su, the highest-rated chess player in Kansas, and junior Adam Harris, tied for first place in the Western Missouri division. "It takes a special kind of intelligence to succeed in chess," Glenn added.

Recruiting At Westridge

"Forensics is spastic!" Each year representatives of West Forensics ventured to Westridge to perform various aspects of their talent, such as: humorous, dramatic, and oral interpretation, duet acting, prose, and poetry. They wanted to involve the audience with their activities so a few Westridge students were chosen to help with a Forensics presentation. "We wanted to show them how exciting Forensics is and what it's all about," sophomore Jason Ford explained. "Hopefully they'll want to join now."

THANK YOU VERY MUCH JENNIFER, ROBERT AND MEGAN FOR LETTING ME STAY WITH YOU THIS YEAR. YOU HAVE BEEN A GREAT HOSTFAMILY. I HAVE GOT NEW EXPERIENCES, NEW FRIENDS AND SEEN A LOT OF THIS COUNTRY. WEST IS A VERY NICE SCHOOL, AND I APPRECIATE ALL THE HELP I HAVE RECIEVED FROM TEACHERS AND STUDENTS. YOU NEVER REALLY LEAVE A PLACE YOU LOVE, PART OF IT YOU TAKE WITH YOU LEAVING PART OF YOU BEHIND.

The SAGA yearbook staff of 1987-1988, from Shawnee Mission West High School, designed and produced volume 26 of SAGA, Jostens Publishing Company, located in Topeka, Kansas, printed the 328 page yearbook, with a final count of 2,200 copies.

All black and white pictures were taken by the SAGA photography staff unless otherwise mentioned. Heather Herrin and Kristen Kinner took color pictures, with processing done by Photo Images. Mini-mag pictures are compliments of Associated Press. John Q. Adams took the individual photographs and some of our formals. Chris Black designed our pages, our cover, and our mini-mag designs. Kent Davis created and wrote our theme, "Staying On Top." All copy in mini-mag was written by Steve Young, Greg Belshe, Kent Davis, Adam Walker, and Taylor McCammon. Our ad pages were basically designed by Bill Wild.

The paper stock is 80 lbs. gloss except in mini-mag. Ripple 183 paper stock was used. Spot-color was Tempo 874 Metallic Gold. Our cover grain is Mission with Gold metalay. Body copy is in 10pt. Avant-Garde with captions, folos, and photocredits are in 8pt. Avant Garde.

A special thank you to Pam Ortega who helped us through many rough times. Thank you, also, to Ed Villwock who did a great job and represented and helped us. Finally, Judy McMahan, whom we'd like to thank for her patience, time, and support through many frustrating days throughout the year.

Upon looking at West's master schedule, many students may see a list of names under the words "Advisory Council". Advisory Council? A group of the elite, the privileged? Well, maybe. Actually, in the words of Miles Sheffler, division coordinator of the Language Arts Department, "Our Advisory Council is a microcosm of the entire faculty, in which every aspect of the school is represented."

Also known as the "Principal's Advisory Council," the group consisted of Principal John Krueger, along with the three Associate Principals, the division coordinators from each academic department, plus Joan Gastinger from the West library, Jim Loomis, head counselor, and Sue Storm from Special Education.

Throughout the year, the Council encouraged open communication among the entire faculty at West. The group met every Tuesday during sixth hour and they discussed current issues brought up by Mr. Krueger as well as expressing their thoughts and opinions. "The group produces output pertaining to ideas and issues concerning West," Mr. Sheffler commented.

This year the Advisory council organized all aspects of the annual Back-to-School night and attended an effective teaching clinic from September 22-25. Members also discussed providing more computers for teacher access.

Through the Advisory Council, each teacher in the faculty had the opportunity to voice their opinions and ideas, either directly to Mr. Krueger or through the various department heads. This open, available channel of communication for the entire faculty helped keep West on top. -Frances Ting

Keeping West on Top

The administrators here at West guided the school through another successful year as they kept West on top.

Third year principal John Krueger, along with associate principals Mrs. Jo Carroll, Mr. Glen Nelson, and Mr. Carl Riggs, handled all the aspects of running West. Mrs. Carroll took responsibility for the freshmen and the Advisory Program, Mr. Nelson catered to the needs of juniors and seniors, and Mr. Riggs took charge of the sophmores as well as the "implementation and polishing of reorganization."

This year emphasized the needs of freshmen. "Our efforts were directed toward the ninthgraders, making sure they were here in school each day to learn," Mr. Krueger stated.

Our principal kept busy during the year. Besides sponsoring our very own Vike Studs, Mr. Krueger maintianed public relations with the community, parents, administration, teachers, and of course the students. "I enjoy the students more and more every year," Mr. Krueger commented. "Because this is my third year at West, I'm feeling more comfortable in what I'm doing and I find I can enjoy the students more. Let's just say it's very easy for me to get up in the morning to come to work! I really enjoy what I'm doing, and it's primarily the students who give me the energy."

Throughout the year Mr. Krueger and his administrators worked hard to generate student and school enthusiasm. Whether in the daily announcements, the West word, the thought for the day, or the various Viking logos decorating Krueger's office, students could feel pride in West through its administrators. - Frances Ting

When a student had a problem and needed help, where did he usually turn? Often, students turned to the West Counselors. Every student had a counselor assigned to him alphabetically, by the last name of the student.

What specifically did the counselors do? Well, a lot actually. Mr. Helmer, who counseled students with last names beginning A through CH, helped students select colleges and vie for scholarships. He also worked with KIC, or Kids In Conflict, which helped students who had personal problems. Mrs. Davis, who counselled students CI through GE, helped kids who wanted to go into a vocation immediately after school. She also worked with Cadet teachers, and the advisory program. Mr. Loomis, who counseled students K and L, was the counselor coordinator and the administrative representative. Mr. Yokum, who counseled students M through PH, also helped the international students at West. Mrs. Johnson, who counseled students

Students Given Assistance

PI through SP, helped students prepare for standardized tests, such as the ACT, TAPS, and SAT. Mrs. Fletcher, who counseled students SQ through Z, helped Mr. Helmer with scholarships and college selection. On top of all this, they also helped students with personal problems find aid.

Another person who got a lot of students who needed help was Betty Wilkerson, the school nurse. She helped from 80 to 100 students a day who were either ill, injured, or "too tired to go to class." She also helped with substance abuse prevention.

Joan Gastinger, the head librarian, and the two other librarians, were also in a position to help students. She sees that anyone who needs a resource can get it, either at our library or from another. The addition of the new library should help them in this capacity in the future. - Steve Young

Handling Total Chaos

Many students do not realize the tremendous work load placed upon the ladies in the office. They met with and confronted the public, in addition to every parent, student, and member of the faculty that entered the doors of the West office. Some chaos would result if any one of them did not show up at school on a given day. Beginning with orientation plans in late August, the ladies underwent tasks such as keeping the books, corresponding with the principal, and recording transcripts. Even with a schedule as hectic as theirs, they managed to replace their frustations with a cheerful smile. These ladies'' day began and ended with the continuous ring of incoming calls, and the never ending stream of inquiring students.

Junior Barbara Shideler stated her views of these special women. "They are very helpful, and they make it easy for me to find the information I need." In addition to these tasks, the ladies handled: messages between parents, students, and faculty maintaining and updating schedules, making a master calendar, the switchboard, questions of substitute teachers, and checking periodically for the eligibility of a student participating in athletics or other groups. They also dispatched the faculty mail, and set up appointments with the counselors.

These dedicated women tried to help new students become comfortable and adjust to the largeness of the school. - Stacy Madson

In addition to selling away game tickets, Activities secretary, Connie Cowdrey answers the many questions of the public.

A Necessary Link

Upon looking at West"s Master schedule, many students may see a list of names under the words Advisory Council. Advisory Council? A group of the elite, the privileged? Well, maybe. Actually, in the words of Miles Sheffler, Division coordinator of the Language Arts Department, "our Advisory Council is a microcosm of the entire faculty, in which every aspect of the school is represented."

Also known as the "Principal"s Advisory Council", the group consisted of Principal John Krueger, along with the three Associate Principals, the division coordinators from each academic department, plus Joan Gastinger from the West library, Jim Loomis, head counselor, and Sue Storm from Special Education.

Throughout the year the Council encouraged open communication among the entire faculty at West. The group met every Tuesday during sixth hour and they discussed current issues brought up by Mr. Krueger as well as expressing their thoughts and opinions. "The group produces output pertaining to ideas and issues concerning West," Mr. Sheffler commented.

This year the Advisory council organized all aspects of the annual Back-to-School night and attended an effective teaching clinic from September 22-25. Members also discussed the computers for teacher access.

Through the Advisory Council, each teacher in the faculty had the opportunity to voice their opinions and ideas either directly to Mr. Krueger, or through the various department heads. This open, available channel of communication among the enire faculty helped keep West on top. - Frances Ting

The Advisory Council gets down to business as they work out the final kinks of attendance policy at their first meeting in August.

Kellie Dickerson

Associate Principal Carl Riggs discussed discipline problems both with students in his office and with teachers on the Advisory Council.

Cooking and Cleaning Crews

Ever been out late some night, just cruising around, and happen to drive by West? It probably seemed strange that lights were on in the building. Why? Who would be inside in the middle of the night? Well, not many students realize it, but the custodians are at work a full 24 hours per day. That means the night-shift was in the building all night getting the building ready for the next school day.

Hardly ever did a spilt Coke or pile of trash or other gob of possibly gross-goo sit dormant on the floors. The custodians always found the mess and cleaned before it was noticed by most students. And this year, with Coke machines on the bridge, no shortage of messy accidents existed. The "Vikes, Pitch-In" program of students throwing away trash for themselves was somewhat successful, but plenty was left to the custodians.

The custodians also served as "Mr. Fix-it"'s. They contended with an endless barrage of broken windows and loose floor tiles. The custodians also finally triumphed in the "Battle of the Walls" in which the movable walls in the cafeteria of their own free will, decided to remain closed during lunch no less than three times. This problem was rectified by the custodians, much to the pleasure of the dining-in students, as they enjoyed the fruits of labor of another set of dedicated workers: the lunch ladies. The lunch ladies were busy by 7:00 every morning serving fresh donuts and other delicacies to the student body. They continued throughout the day preparing food not only for the West students and faculty but for four elementary schools as well. After the lunch-rush, the rest of the day was spent cleaning the kitchen by these dedicated culinary professionals. - Steve Young

An enormous volume of work poured into the twenty-sixth volume of SAGA, accompanied by late nights (early mornings), general disorder, violently thrown pencils, and stress galore. Nobody told us that before we took the job, but we do it willingly, to produce the best book possible. This is yours. Enjoy.

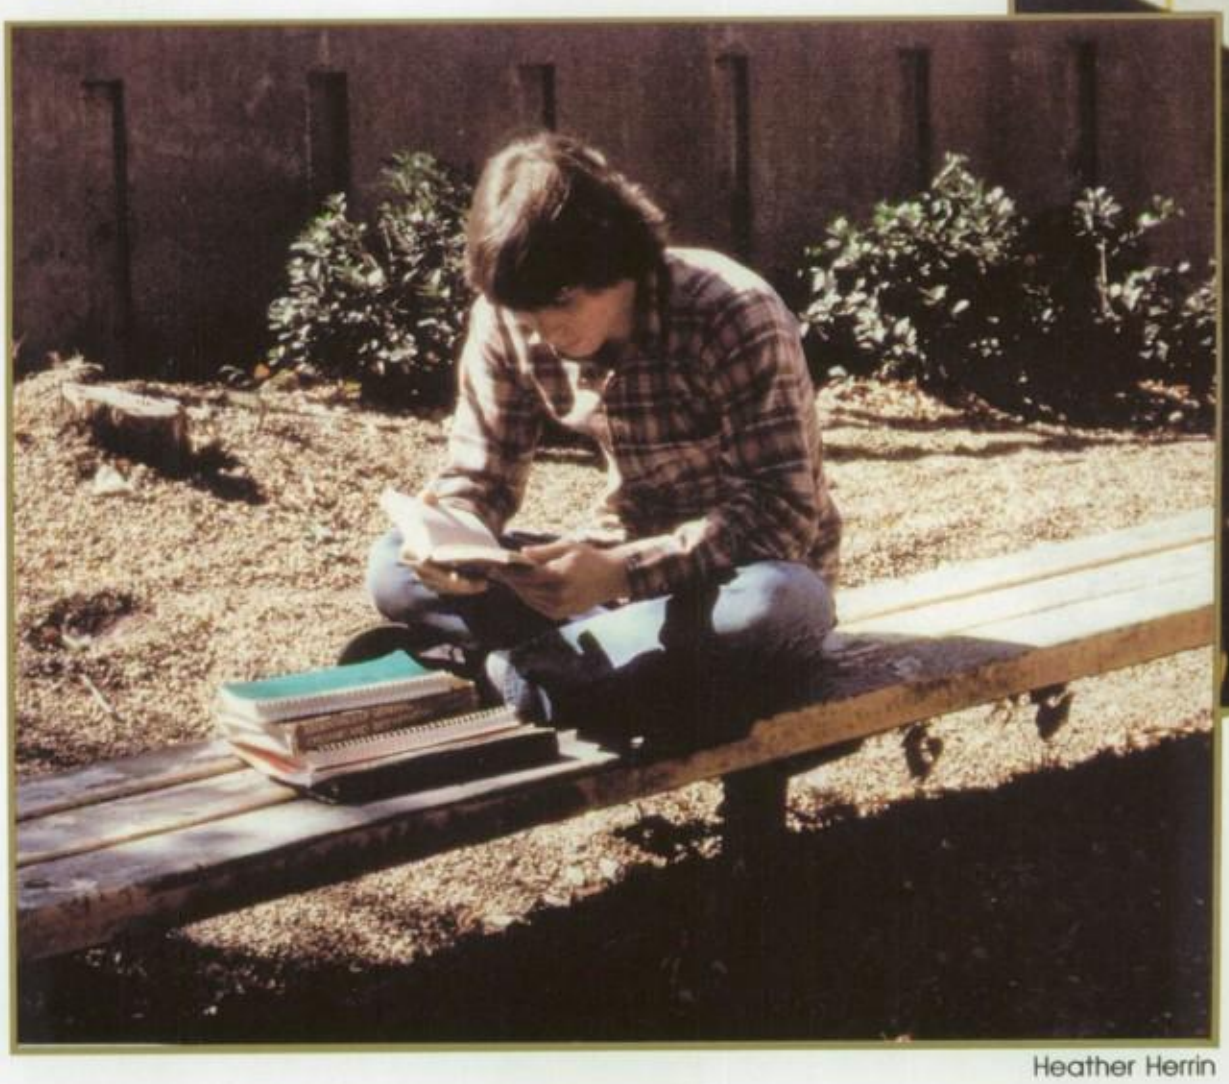
Diversity ranked at the Top of West's virtues. A favorite music survey might render such diverse answers as "Cinderella," to "Steve Winwood," to "Schubert," to "The Smiths," to "7 Seconds." Different opinions formed an educational atmosphere where we all dealt with those different from ourselves - a reflection of the real world rather than "Fast Times at Ridgemont High."

Kristen Kinner

The Coke machines' move to the bridge formed a new location for a melting pot of students to laugh, study, talk, or just stare.

To say that we had put our nose to the grindstone to do well in school rings as an understatement: face to the grindstone fits better. Studying late nights and even early mornings came with the territory. But hey, we had to stay on top of our grades.



Heather Herrin

West students had little time to lax so some tried to make study more bearable by turning to a cluded bench in the courtyard.

Spirit never had a chance of falling from the Top. The timeless Beach Boys song, "Be True to Your School," rang nowhere more true than down our halls. A common stake in West and joy at its successes unified the student body like nothing else could.

In their second season und Coach Gordon Wetmore, the Va sity soccer team continued co struction on a new "built tough tradition.

Looking back, one other thing changed - our perception of what really was the Top. During the West experience, the puzzle pieces were pulled together to form a picture of the truth. Success as the world defined it didn't nearly compare to the success we defined personally. Face it. After realizing that, we discovered the most important Top — bridge served as the psycholo-

s couch and center of discus-
for West students, as shown by

After West, we faced the new world with smiles - the friends and the learning, both in and out of school.

Staying on Top of ourselves.
